How the Oil Crossed the Hills.

John Ward, one of the watchmen on duty during the filling of the new oil pipe line in Pennsylvania, gives the following account of what he saw: The line crosses Hiner's Run, or its head waters, at a place called Marysville Springs. Here there is quite a hollow or depression in the ground. From this place to the residence of Mr. Holding, some six miles beyond, there is a gradual rise; this the oil had to climb after passing the hollow at the spring. I was told to watch well this hollow, as the oil had ascended the Kettle Creek Mountain and was coming. I repaired to the hollow and lay some hours there, when I heard a sound like a heavy wind, and presently heard the oil gurgling past. I waited some time. There was no leakage, and all seemed perfect. I thought that the pipe-line was a success for sure, and so left my position and passed along to see if it was all right ahead. I had gone some two miles when I received a dispatch to watch well the hollow and to lay out for some time, so I hastened back. Imagine my astonishment when I saw the place I had left such a short time before so tame, now hissing at ten thousand points. Jets of water flew in every direction, and hundreds of barrels flowing down Hiner's Run, never to see a market. I thought the pipe was gone up, sure. At first I was afraid to approach it, but soon grew valiant and with a walking stick I set to work to stop the leak. I made poor headway. It was a dark night, and I dared have no light. I had taken off my coat, the whizzing oil carried away my hat, and I was drenched with oil. My pockets and my hair and eyes were full, and if I was not then an oil man, I would like to know what constituted me. I was now certain that the oil had all this time been climbing the upgrade to Mr. Holding's, but was now on the descent for Pine Bottom Run. This caused a suction and relieved the hollow at the springs. I again waited some time, when I received a dispatch to hasten to Haneyville, that the pipe was bursting. I procured a horse and went with all speed. When I arrived the people there were greatly excited. The pipe was throbbing and whizzing at every pore. McClure Springs were nowhere. The oil was spouting from the pipe for miles. I made no attempt to climb. I knew from my experience that the pipe was climbing the high mountain below Pine Creek, but the pressure was so great that I feared every moment the pipes would burst. There was a force against which human power was of no avail, hence we only stood and looked on, when suddenly, as quick as thought, all common sense ceased, except a sucking in of air, and I heard the oil hiss past my ears, the pipe, and knew it had crossed over the mountain and was speeding its way to Williamsport, with no more mountains to climb, and that the oil line was an established fact.—Cor. Clinton (N. Y.) Democrat.

Profitable Farming.

There appears to be much confusion of ideas with regard to what is usually called profitable agriculture. In many instances—and, in fact, in nearly every as a general rule—the prevalent idea among farmers is that he who obtains most from his land with the least outlay in money or labor secures the largest profit on the investment. Carrying this idea into practice has ruined millions of acres of farming lands, and left them little better than a worthless waste. To wear out soil as rapidly as possible by constant cropping, retaining nothing to restore or keep up its fertility may appear for a while to be profitable farming; but it is far otherwise, as many have learned through bitter experience. The impoverished farms of the older States, and the rapidly increasing number in the new, with the constant falling off in the yield of grain and other crops on land not long since deemed so fertile, inexhaustible, show that to expect large returns at the expense of the capital invested in farming is a ruinous policy.

If a man can obtain forty bushels of wheat per acre, or seventy-five of corn, and he has no more to grow, or having produced the crop, then he can easily figure up his profits by counting the cost of raising the crop, adding interest on the value of the land. But when he has expended the money, and is unable to diminish his liabilities for producing a succeeding crop, this should also be charged to the capital account, and deducted from the profits. This charging loss of fertility to crop cost, and the money, considered by many farmers a rather unusual proceeding; but that it is perfectly legitimate and necessary, in order to arrive at anything like an accurate basis for calculating profit and loss, need not appear to every one who will give it a moment's thought.

We frequently hear farmers regretting the loss of fertility in their lands, and they will tell us that twenty, thirty, or more years ago, they thought nothing of getting thirty or forty bushels of wheat per acre, at a cost not exceeding the value of ten; "and then," say they, "there was money to be made in farming." It is true, as we will make it to their advantage to obtain their supplies of
