Ninetieth Anniversary Banquet to Ex-Governor Felch.

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS FROM ABROAD.

Probably Made One.—Proposals for the Building of Sewers.—Circuit Court Docket, and Other News of Interest.

Probably Mr. and Mrs. Buckhold.
"I am a member of the staff of the New York World and my name is W. H. Buckhold," explained a stylish-looking gentleman in the "thirties" a few days ago, as he stepped into the Argus office. Continuing, Mr. Buckhold stated that several years ago he graduated from the University. After further conversation Mr. Buckhold inquired for the proper official to apply to for a marriage license. The Argus scribe informed him on that point. Then Mr. Buckhold said he was out in this country for the purpose of marriage; that the lady was in the city with him; that her parents, living in Detroit or Toledo, did not yearn to call him their son-in-law and in fact were "dead agin" the match. Not so, however, with her sister, who lived in Milan. The intended bride went to Milan, ostensibly to visit her sister but really to meet and marry him. Mr. Buckhold asked and was given the name of a minister in the city; and departed. Doubtless the marriage took place as designed.

In the Circuit Court.

The regular October term of the Washtenaw county circuit court was opened yesterday morning by Judge Kinne. There are 105 cases on the docket, being 24 criminal, 46 issues of fact, 2 imparlances, 1 issue of law, 13 chancery first class, 2 second class and 17 fourth class. Among the criminal cases are 13 violations of the liquor law. In the chancery fourth class the case of the Dexter Savings Bank vs. George Bell et. al., which went over the term, is of much interest. It is a bill of inter-pleader filed to determine who shall receive the reward offered for the detection of the Dexter bank robber. A large array of legal talent is concerned in the case. Lawrence & Butterfield are the solicitors of the bank and John W. Hawley, A. J. Sawyer, E. B. Norris, Arthur Brown and Lehman Bros. the solicitors for the claimants. The bank has nothing to do but simply wait and let the claimants fight it out together.

The docket was quickly disposed of and the prospect is that there will be very few cases tried by the court and none by the jury.

W. J. MILLER, Clerk.

In Honor of Governor Felch.

On Friday, ex-Governor Alpheus Felch, Ann Arbor's distinguished citizen, celebrated his ninetieth birthday. As was becoming the occasion, the Washtenaw county bar association gave a banquet, at the Cook house, in his honor. It was a most notable gathering, such as is not often held in Ann Arbor.

At 8 o'clock the venerable Governor Felch appeared, and for an hour an informal reception was held in the parlors of the Cook house. Governor Felch was in excellent spirits and appeared like a man of fifty. He was accompanied by ex-Senator Jones, of Dubuque, Iowa, the last delegate in congress of the territory of Michigan. Among the distinguished guests present were ex-Judges Thomas M. Cooley, Graves and Douglas, Judges C. B. Grant and Frank Hooker, ex-Governors Jerome and Begole.

At 9 o'clock the company descended into the spacious dining room. The tables were loaded down with all the delicacies of the season and did credit to the well known hostelry. The tables were fittingly adorned with a profusion of roses. Some sixty gentlemen sat down and did justice to the menu. The menu cards were in themselves a very neat conception. They were gotten up in the form of a legal document. An excellent portrait of the governor, taken by Randall within the last three weeks, headed the first page.

After knives and forks were laid down, Judge Kinne, the toast-master, arose and in a few well chosen words, introduced Governor Felch, who responded to the toast, "Our Guests of the Evening." He was evidently moved by the occasion, and spoke in part as follows:

"Mr. President and Gentlemen: No words which I can command can adequately express my feelings on this occasion. I should be less than mortal if this testimonial of the partiality of my fellow citizens, and the kind words which have been spoken here tonight did not touch my heart. They are not the words of strangers, but of friends, and they will pass into my memory as a treasure never to be forgotten. I can reciprocate only by the poor return of my warmest thanks. You have been so kind as to remember what I of course could not forget, that ninety years of my life have already passed, and I enter today the last decade of the century. It is a longer period of life than is allotted to most men—long enough for the visionary anticipations of youth, and the active, energetic, ambitious and useful years of middle life, to have passed. At that age all that the man was to do is done. The little remnant of life is very brief, but I cannot look upon it as devoid of enjoyment, or that there is any place for regret, that others must do the work that it was his ambition to do. Every true man bids God-speed to all workers in the good cause of truth and prosperity of his fellow-man.

"Old age is usually regarded as a gloomy period of life, when decrepitude has taken the place of physical energy, and every source of pleasure is dried up. This is not a mere modern speculation. A little more than eighteen hundred years ago Cicero wrote his beautiful essay on "Old Age," in which he enumerates the supposed evils of that period of human life, and discourses eloquently upon the many solaces that mitigate its evils.

"Since that time the printed book has been given to the world, and the old man in his library may hold communion with the authors of all ages, and from the periodical press he can daily learn the doings and the progress of the modern world in which he lives.

"It is something to have lived in an age of this great and general progress. These long years have not been barren of fruit. To me the memory of the past is a living present.

"Sixty years of my life have been spent here in Michigan. I have seen its growth from an almost unbroken wilderness to a powerful and wealthy state, from a primitive organization of a territorial government with few features of a representative republic, to its incorporation into the great union of American states.

"To the young it is of the present and not of the past, but to me whose memory goes back to the time when the state was a mere nothing, and who has witnessed the progressive steps of its growth it is much more. In my mind the past and the present meet and embrace each other, and the God-given gift of memory secures and respects the incidents of the past with a pleasure-giving power that never tires.

"I rejoice that we have with us tonight some of the actors in the drama of progression.
"All my life I have been happy in being classed as one of the profession. I have stood in the ranks since 1830, and three years after that date, became a member of the Michigan bar. I have taxed my memory in vain to find a single man now living who was a member of the bar of Michigan when I came here in 1833. But the profession has increased immensely since that time in numbers, acquisitions and influence.

"This pleasant meeting, called by your kind invitation, my brothers of the legal profession, and your hearty and cordial greetings, is an incident never to be forgotten by me, and I beg of you to accept my warmest acknowledgements and thanks.

His remarks were received with rounds of applause.
Judge Kinne then called upon Ex-Senator George M. Jones, of Dubuque, Iowa, to respond to the toast "The Golden Age of the United States Senate. Senator Jones, Senator Bradbury, of Maine, and Governor Felch are the only surviving senators of the thirtieth congress. He had a clear voice and gave much interesting historical information about the early history of Michigan and congress. Governor Porter appointed him chief justice of the territory which then included Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa. He said as follows:

"I discharged the duties for three years, at the end of which time I was nominated for the senate at Mineral Point. I was elected and went on to Washington in December, 1835.

"Arriving at Washington I called upon President Jackson in company with Senator Linn. The president scrutinized me rather closely and said: 'If you are from Missouri I think I have seen you before. I once had a young sergeant of my bodyguard by the name of George W. Jones.' I told the president that I was the same man and also a college mate of his adopted son, Stockley Donaldson, the younger brother of his then private secretary.

"Well, while in the senate I changed the boundary of Michigan and Wisconsin, giving the names to both Wisconsin and Iowa, and filling all the offices of the new territory with men chosen by myself, a thing that has never been done since nor before.

"My term of service in the senate, with Governor Felch expired March 4, 1859, when President Buchanan, without recommendation nor consultation, appointed me United States minister to the United States of Columbia in South America.

"Three years ago I visited Detroit, where I was given a reception by my friends, at which Governor Felch was present, and it is therefore as little as I can do to be present on this occasion and join with you in drinking to the health and still longer life of the 'Grand Old Man.'

Judge T. M. Cooley responded to the toast "The American Lawyer." He said:
"If there is any subject that I feel myself capable of dealing with, it is the one mentioned. I should like to speak of the American lawyer and point out in what way he is deserving and how he differs from the legal men of other countries. But I am here for no other purpose than to do honor and pay respect to your guest, who has himself been a cherished member of our profession for half a century, and for one-half a century he has led no other life than that of a member of the bar."

He then followed with a touching tribute to Governor Felch, and analyzed the high character of the American lawyer. In conclusion he said:
"There is one characteristic of him which is noticeable in my case, and that is, if he has nothing to say he always sits down. As the former is my position, I will act upon the latter."

Then followed responses to the toast, "The Governors of Michigan," by ex-Governor David H. Jerome, of Saginaw; "The University of Michigan," by Dr. James B. Angell; "Pioneer Days," by Col. I. R. Grosvenor, Monroe; "The Bar of Washtenaw County," by Hon. A. J. Sawyer, president of the bar association.

"To the young it is of the present and not of the past, but to me whose memory goes back to the time when the state was a mere nothing, and who has witnessed the progressive steps of its growth it is much more. In my mind the past and the present meet and embrace each other,

grets, from many who could not be present.

Space forbids the reproduction of all the kind and good words said in these epistles, but room is made for that of ex-Senator James W. Bradbury, of Bangor, Maine, who was the colleague of Senator Felch and is now ninety-three years of age, and the one from G. V. N. Lothrop. The Senator wrote as follows:

"It would give me so much pleasure to be present and unite with you in the expression of such appreciation that even at my age, ninety-three, I would undertake the journey if the distance were less.

"He is my dearest and oldest living friend. We commenced the study of Virgil together at Limerick Academy seventy-five years ago. We were at Bowdoin College together, though not in the same class. We commenced the practice of law about the same time. We entered the United States senate together in 1847, and we are now the sole survivors of the senators of that session. Only two others can be added to the list of survivors of the hundred members of that body during its six years' service. They are Robert C. Winthrope, of Massachusetts, and George W. Jones, of Iowa.

"I knew the governor best during his senatorial life, and it is no small commendation to be able to say of him today that as a safe, wise and patriotic statesman, always true to his convictions and true to the interests and honor of his state and the union, he was the peer of his colleagues and also of your distinguished citizen, General Cass.

"Such a life as that of Governor Felch, crowned with every private virtue, is worthy of commendation. His is a life that has few parallels, and now, as he enters the ranks of the nonagenarians, I am glad to be able to give him assurance of our high appreciation and affectionate regard."

Following that of Senator Bradbury a letter was read from Honorable G. V. N. Lothrop, of Detroit, of which the following is an extract: "Governor Felch has held a long line of public trusts, and all with distinction and without stain. I recall with great satisfaction that I have been honored with his acquaintance and friendship for more than fifty years.

"Although we cannot say of him, as was said of the great Hebrew prophet, his eye is not dim nor his natural force abated, and we can rejoice to know that he still holds much of the vigor of a ripe manhood. He has the felicity of living to hear his long and fruitful life fairly summed up, and to hear the verdict: well done.

"May his years outrun the century, and still present to rising generations an inspiring model of the true citizen, statesman and patriot."

To those who enjoyed the privilege of being present it seemed like listening to the pages of past history. May Governor Felch be long spared to his family and many friends is the sincere wish of everyone.

Psychology vs. The Birch.

Prof. John Dewey, recently of the Michigan University, addressed, last week, the kindergarten convention, in Chicago, on "Psychology as a substitute for the rod." The many friends of the professor in Ann Arbor will appreciate the following, taken from the Chicago Herald:
"He claimed that science of mind was the best implement parents had with which to keep their children in the right path. The only way to get along with a child was to convert all its bad influences into good ones, but the professor had no easy and every-day method of doing it, and the audience moved out in large sections, especially the men.

"The professor advised the sparing of the rod—this moved out other fathers—and thought a mother to be a successful mother ought also be a skilled psychologist. Were all women such they would know how to convert the spasmodic energy which vents itself into nocturnal disturbances into psalms of gladness and to turn such wastefulness of strength into channels which would be beneficial.

"A man near the window said he was going to find out whether Professor Dewey had any small boys, and if so he would make a personal examination into the results of the psychological tools as against the benefits derived by a free use of the birch."

After October 1st the Ladies' Library will be open from 2 to 4 p. m., instead of from 3 to 5 p. m.

Free wool gives the manufacturer cheaper raw material and enables him to produce his product at a lower cost than heretofore.

For the benefit of those who may not be convinced that the reduction in tariff rates caused by the new bill will result in a reduction of prices to consumers, we quote from the latest advertisements of one of our most reliable business houses.

In an interview in the Niagara Cataract, Mr. H. A. Massey, president of a large Canadian manufacturing company, employing 2,000 workmen, and shipping its products to all parts of the world, announces that the company intends to move its plant into the States, for the reason that raw material is cheaper here under the new tariff than in Canada. He says:

"That new democratic tariff of yours will benefit your country immensely. By freeing raw materials it will cheapen the cost of manufactured articles both to manufacturer and consumer. It will draw to your side manufacturing concerns from Canada who want a wider market and an opportunity to manufacture goods cheaper and more profitably. It is that new tariff bill that has attracted us to your shores."

Let the calamity howler who sees in free raw materials ruin for our manufacturing interests, and loss of employment for labor, reflect on the above against the time when his vocation will be terminated.

If Washtenaw county democrats elect any one this year it is sure to be an Ann Arbor man. In fact, with the exception of a coroner from Ypsilanti no one else was allowed on the ticket.—Northville Record.

Ann Arbor is not in it this year. The republican ticket is to be elected in this county, and that has not an Ann Arbor man on it with one or two exceptions. Just watch the result.—Courier.

So far as the Record is concerned the Argus begs to inform it that it is away off. Ann Arbor city has on the democratic county ticket prosecuting attorney, one circuit court commissioner and one coroner, which of course the city should have. Then the candidate for clerk lives in the city, but the nomination went to him because of his long and faithful party services.

The death of Prof. Joseph Estabrook at Olivet, Sunday night, removes from the activities of life one of Michigan's most prominent educators as well as one of the purest and most saintly characters it has ever been the pleasure and profit of the writer to know.

Free wool gives the manufacturer cheaper raw material and enables him to produce his product at a lower cost than heretofore. The duties on woolen goods have been largely reduced. Prices will be correspondingly reduced, and all consumers will be benefited thereby.

The present policy is to crush out the growing of sugar cane in the United States and transfer the industry to foreign countries.—Courier.

Here probably is as fine an illustration of the diluted vaporing of protectionism gone mad as anyone need ever expect to see. But that even the kindergarden Courier can believe the dominant party in this nation to be actuated by such a purpose in its tariff policy is impossible. Its object must be to deceive the unwary, therefore. Farther on in the same article from which the above clipping is taken, the Courier says: "The policy of the McKinley bill was to encourage the production of sugar in the United States * * * while the Wilson bill bankrupts the southern sugar cane growers."

WALTER H. DANCER.

Walter H. Dancer, the democratic nominee of the first district of this county in the lower house of the state legislature, was born in the township in which he still resides. He is fifty years of age, and has always lived in the township of Lima. Mr. Dancer is a practical and successful farmer, and the owner of two hundred acres of as fine land as is in the county.

McKINLEY ANSWERED.

In a recent speech at Bangor, Maine, Gov. McKinley made comparisons between the new tariff act and the one that bears his name, and asked the following questions and made these assertions: Better in which particular? Whose factories will it set to work? It will not increase the demand for labor at home. It will not start a single new factory.

WASHINGTON BLOCK.

Textile World, a trade publication, shows who are set to work by the Wilson tariff.

The woolen mill at Niantic, R. I., is soon to be operated after a shutdown of several years. It has been leased for the manufacture of yarns.

The Baltic Mill Company, Enfield, N. H., has enlarged its plant. The machinery of the Riverside Woolen Company, at Lebanon, N. H., is being increased.

At a recent meeting of the stockholders of the Modena Cotton Mills, Gastonia, N. C., it was decided to put on 70 more looms and 3,000 spindles.

Enlargements are being made to Rhodes Brothers' factory at Aston Mill, Pa.

The woolen mill at East Lyon, R. I., which has been idle for several years, has been leased to Alfred Burdick and George Lawton, who will manufacture yarns. It is understood that they have orders ahead for a year and that they will start up the mill as soon as possible.

The Globe Mill, Clarke & Co., Augusta, Ga., manufacturers of yarns, have lately put in forty looms, and will manufacture drills, sheeting, etc. They expect to commence operation in three weeks.

The new Dilling Cotton Mills, Kings Mountain, N. C., will be in operation in about two or three weeks.

The East Pond Manufacturing Company, Newport, Me., is to add ten more looms to the woolen mills, which will give an output of one-third more capacity than now.

A new company has been incorporated at Barnesville, Ga., to manufacture underwear. They commenced manufacturing September 1.

These are but a few of the many similar items which are given from north, south, east and west, but they indicate that the textile industry is entering upon an era of unwonted business revival. And what is true in the textile industry seems to be equally true in other industrial enterprises. All these facts go to prove that the industries of the country are in no danger from the changes in the tariff, and that those who assert the contrary will soon be compelled to cease their disquieting talk or make themselves supremely ridiculous.

Antiquity at the Fair.

In Floral Hall, and most attractive among the attractions that deft ladies' hands wrought out for the pleasure of fair seers, and for the greater pleasure of beating the other woman, stood a cabinet of antique pottery. No piece was allowed to enter the presence of this antique 400, that had not a half century to its credit of years, in two. And of all the pieces, no age were alike. It may seem a little hard to believe, but upon good authority we were informed that the gigantic piece of pottery crowning the whole was the only foot-bath (of the kind) in Washtenaw county. There were dinner plates, tea plates, cups, sauchers, pitchers and bowls of all sizes, shapes, and of peculiarly rich designs. Among the most rare was a gift from the mother of Mr. F. H. Mills, the genial secretary, and the only pieces added during the fair. Many of these articles are worth more than their weight in gold, even in monometallic times. The collection is one that it would be very difficult if at all possible to duplicate, and represents twenty-five years of the most thoughtful care and the greatest determination on the part of the collector, Mrs. J. Willard Babbitt, of Ypsilanti. It has been picked up through the years, a piece here and another there, all the gifts of those who have been awakened by the zeal of Mrs. Babbitt to the real significance of such a collection. Every one of the Argus readers in whose hands there are rare pieces of pottery ought to be represented in this memorial cabinet that some day ought to be added to the treasures of the art section of our State University museum.
