The old-time guests for whom I wait
Come few and slow, methinks, to-day.
Ah! who could hear my messages
Across the dim, unsounded seas
On which so many have sailed away! Come, then, old friends, who linger yet, And let us meet, as we have met, Once more beneath this low sunshine; And grateful for the good we've known, The riddles solved, the ills outgrown, Shake hands upon the border line.

From Peck's Sun Paying in Chickens.

There is an article going the round of the papers relating how a man went to Moore, said that he was too poor to take a paper. The following is the gist of the story:
Mr. Moore said, "You keep chickens, I in hand to cross examine him.
"Now, see here, Mr. Smith, we want in hand to cross examine him.

We know, when paper is high, editors are Then, boiling liable to take their pay in truck. The above article looks so plausable that some poor as calmly cool and serene as an autumnal country editor may think there's millions in it, and he will go to speculating in chickns that way.

But we warn them that they are liable to get left. We tried it there once at La Crosse. Uncle Eliakin Barlow came in one day and said our paper didn't amount to a string of suckers, and he would be tetotally gumsquizzled if he would take it any longer nless he could pay in trade. He sold milk and kept chickens. We could get milk, but Eliakin was always playing common cow's milk for his "Jersey cow's milk, so we concluded to suggest this chicken dodge, that Moore tried with such good effect. We wanted to teach him a esson, so we told him to go home and pick out a chicken and call it ours, and give us the proceeds, in two years from date, whether it was eggs or chickens.

He bit like a bass. He said he would do it, by the great jewhilikins. So he went his way and we went ours. Many a time during the two years did we estimate the amount of poultry that would be ours. We built a hen coop and got ready to go into the hen business. The day the two years were lean. Although the fat is considered by many to be so much waste, still "a fat up we drove out to Eliakin's place to take an account of stock. Eliakin was milking a "Jersey" cow, there near the pump, and when he had finished "stripping" he would show us our property. Well, he would show us our property. after a while he got up off his milking stool, kicked a little rheumatiz out of his hind leg, and said:

How much have you made on this trade?' We hope to be hornsworgled if it wasn't true, and the rooster wasn't worth four cents. And, to make the matter worse, Eliakin presented a bill to us of $4.80 for corn our rooster had eaten in the two years. It is needless to say we have demanded eash of our subscribers since. I never saw a deeper, or more soulsatisfying, heart-stirring, or appreciative smile than was that which dwelt upon the faces of the audience, and stole out tremenduously upon the air, on a certain oc-casion when Lawyer Holden, of Oxford county, Maine, was questioning a certain Crooked River witness on a case at law. It was a very simple matter: A man of Norway, a well to do farmer, in passing the dwelling of old Sam Pingree, in a one horse wagon, had run over and killed a small pig. Pingree was boiling, and failing to obtain pay by bluster, he resorted to law, and instructed Holden to sue; and Holden did so.

The case came up before Justice Upton. Marston was the name of the defendant, and it very soon became evident that every body's sympathy was with him. Old Pin-gree's pigs and cattle, and animals of all sorts, had been a nuisance in the highway

r years.
Among Marston's witnesses was Uncle Tim Smith—a good old soul—as honest as the day is long—truthful and simple-hearted—albeit, a little inclined to tell big stories of his own exploits. Uncle Tim had seen the whole thing—had seen the the Rural New Yorker, and pig run under the horse's feet, coming very

Many a good housewife has been often puzzled how to choose a ham. The following simple direction may be of service to assist those in the dilemma : First. Never buy a ham simply because it is offered at a low price. No really first-class ham is apt to be sold at a very low

Second. Never select a ham which is too many to be so much waste, still "a fat always furnishes tender, juicy and fine flavored meat, while a lean ham is very often tough and dry when cooked. The joint should be well rounded and plump, rather than thin and fat. The skin should be thin and pliable.

Third. Choose freshly cured hams. Wines mprove by age, hams do not. The more recently the joint has come from the curing cast (other things being equal), the better it will please when cooked.

Formerly the year's supply was packed need be "canvassed" or "bagged preserve it against the ravages of flies, and in this shape carried to meet the demand, in summer and fall. This necessarily resulted in a considerable loss of the juices of the meat by evaporation, while the surface of the flesh gradually became densely covered with mildew, which often gave a moldy flavor to the entire ham. This has now been entirely obviated by such improvements in curing by ice, that hams of the very finest quality are prepared even in the hottest weather, and so the market affords buyers new cured hams for every day in the year.

Fourth. As regards the size of a ham, that should depend very much on what you wish to do with it. A whole ham always boils more satisfactory than a piece. For broiling or frying a ham of not less than 12 pounds should be selected. One from 14 to 16 pounds is preferable—Food and

A Teutonic Argument.

In the legislature of Ohio, there was a warm dispute whether a certain proposed railroad should commence at a given point down or at a certain other up the river. "Who ever heard," said a down the river advocate, "of beginning anything at the top? Who ever heard of building a chimney from the top downward? Who ever saw a house begun at the top? The Missing Rhymes.

The poem with comments upon it given below, which were published in the Indianapolis Herald is one of the most remarkable in the English language, remarkable for its peculiar rhyme and puzzle and put any more meat into my mouth, and kept time with the family. Glad was I if any of our readers can solve it; or, in when dinner was over. It being cool other words, put the missing rhymes to it, according to the rule laid down, which is as follows: 1st. The rhyming word must have a meaning in keeping with the context, line 2d. After the missing word of the first line is found, the missing word of the second line must be exactly the same, with the exception of having only one letter prefixed to it; and the missing word of the third line must be exactly the same as the second, with just one letter more pre-fixed to it, and all these must be English words, in unison with the whole poem. To give a clear idea of what is meant, we will insert the missing rhymes of the first stanza:

The captain strode from fore to AFT, As lordly on his simple RAFT As though it was some noble CRAFT. Now it will be observed that these hymes make good sense with what precedes them; and that the second is made from the first by prefixing one letter; and the third from the second, by prefixing one more letter, and all three rhyme and give sense to the whole stanza, which otherwise would be simply nonsense. first rhyme-word aft; the second is also aft, with only the prefix of the letter R, which makes the word raft; and the third is raft, with only another prefix of the letter C, which makes it craft. And so it goes on down through the whole poem, which is richly worth the study of old and young, the preceptor and his pupils, as ingeniously showing of what wonderful combinations our language is capable.

To give our readers a good fair start, we will here insert the rhymes of the second

A True Story.

The following old story has been published heretofore in these columns, but Chap-lain McCabe sends it to the Inter Ocean in a little different form, and recommends it to the socialists for perusal:

A young man sat late at night in a rum saloon. He was spending his money there, drinking and gambling. Ashamed to go home to his wronged family, he lingered after all the rest had retired. 'I wish he would go," said the rum-

He was converted, joined the church, and ecame a good, true man. Months afterward he met the saloon keeper on the street.
"Why don't you come around any more?"

"Ah," said the young workingman, "I shingle my own roof now."

The church of the Lord Jesus is teaching many poor slaves of sin how to find liberty from the bondage of Satan, and then they soon learn how to "shingle their own ' Is the church to get no credit for this prevention of poverty? Is the man who takes a single basket into the abode of poverty to be commended so far above the man who, by mighty prevailing prayer, rescues a soul from death, and provides, meanwhile, for a long procession of baskets borne by loving hands to the happy circle of dependent ones?

The only way to permanently cure poverty of humanity is to cure its sin.

It tired of being dependent upon others, and that he had started out in the world with certainly, but an exceedingly poor way of entering upon it. If he had felt such a course necessary, he certainly, if in his right mind, should not have caused his mother so much agony and his friends so much that close application to study and despond-ency has led his mind to wander. He is a young man of good habits, and fair standing in his classes, and well thought of by his classmates. His strange conduct is hard to account for.

WARD CAUCUSES. Aldermen and Constables-Delegates and Ward Committees.

The republican electors of the different wards in this city met in the various places designated last Wednesday evening, placed in nomination an alderman and constable for each ward, chose delegates to meet this evening for the purpose of nominating a city ticket, and elected a ward committee. Owing to an error made in copying the call respecting the hour, there was a little misunderstanding in one or two wards, but it was finally decided that 7½ o'clock was the hour designated, we believe. Hon. George C. Langdon, Rx-Mayor of Detroit: Mich., says:

I have repeatedly used the Nervine for Neuralgic suffering, and have never found it to fall in giving almost immediate relief. I would not be without it in my house for ten times its cost. Too much cannot be said for it, or in its favor. Some may think this streng language; none too strong for those who know what Neuralgia is, and find relief from its use.

Very respectfully,
