A MATTER OF INTEREST

to many people just now is the selection of a good place for a summer vacation. With a great many it is customary to get away from home as soon as hot weather comes, and spend the summer at some place near the water. Harbor Springs, Bay View, Petoskey, Charlevoix, Traverse City, and the various resorts on Grand Traverse Bay, offer many advantages to the seeker after rest and coolness. They are so well known that a description of their charms is not necessary in this limited space. We want to say that the new route to these points, the Chicago and West Michigan Ry., is a favorite one and will be used by a great many people this year who appreciate its splendid service and the beautiful scenery along its line.

For over forty miles north of Traverse City the road skirts the shores of lakes, bays, and rivers, which with the forests surrounding them form pictures which must be seen to be appreciated. Commencing June 25th, the service will consist of three through trains per day from Chicago, to Bay View via the "West Michigan," and two from Detroit via the Detroit, Lansing and Northern R. R. to Grand Rapids, there connecting with the C. & W. M.

Morning trains will have elegant parlor cars, and night trains Wagner sleeping cars through from Chicago and Detroit to Bay View, through Traverse City, Charlevoix, and Petoskey. All agents sell tickets via the "West Michigan." We want you to try it this year.

ANN ARBOR'S WATER SUPPLY.

The Subject Being Investigated by a Council Committee—What Experts Say.

The city of Ann Arbor is awakening to the fact that a larger and better water supply is needed to satisfy the demands of the citizens. At the last meeting of the common council the water committee was instructed to investigate the quality and quantity of water being furnished and make a detailed report at the next meeting. The committee is at work and if the council has any power to do so, an effort will be made to have the company improve the present system.

The committee visited the plant of the company Friday evening. At the engine house there was but a small supply of water on hand, the consumption throughout the city being nearly as much as was being pumped. A pipe has been laid into the river, but this is of but little use, the suction from the engine not being sufficient to draw a full load of river water up the steep grade from the river and force it through the distributing mains. The remedy suggested was that instead of depending upon the small springs to furnish the supply in the basins, that a large well, 25 or 30 feet in diameter, be sunk in the vicinity of these springs and it is thought that this would furnish an adequate supply of pure water for the city. This would involve an expense of several thousand dollars, but until some means of furnishing our citizens with pure water and plenty of it, the company will not be able to satisfy the people.

At the reservoir, the council committee found matters even worse than they had expected. There was but eight or ten inches of water in the reservoir and that was not the most inviting to look upon. The committee discovered numerous small crabs but no fish, although no special search was made for them, owing to the riled up condition of the water. The deposit around the basin was of a reddish color, and to the piscatorial nose of City Clerk Miller it smelled rather "fishy."

In connection with the discussion of the water question, the Courier gives a letter written to The Times from an authority on such matters, Mr. W. R. Coats:

Jackson, July 6, 1893.

To the Editor of the Times:

I notice with much interest your comments relative to the water works situation at Ann Arbor. In 1872 I was called to Ann Arbor for the purpose of making an investigation relative to the development of a public water supply, and water works system. After a careful investigation I became fully satisfied that an ample supply of excellent ground water could be easily developed there, in precisely the same manner as I developed the Ypsilanti supply four years ago.

I recommended a reservoir on the same site of the present reservoir at Ann Arbor, but would have raised the site 40 feet, and enclosed the reservoir. Your present elevation is not adequate for effective service. I would have put the pumping works and developed the supply to a point down the river, below the Sinclair Mills. This would have brought your reservoir and pumps in relative proper position with the great bulk of the city between. It is an inexcusable engineering blunder to put the reservoir and the pumping station on one and the same side of the city. Placed on opposite sides, the economy and efficiency of service is vastly increased. Properly so placed, it is rarely necessary to pump more than 20 per cent. of the water to the reservoir at all, as in its passage through the distributing mains, fully 80 per cent. is absorbed in the current consumption. Pumping directly through the street mains, only excess above current consumption—while the pumps are running—goes to the reservoir at all. This disposes of the great bulk of the water at the minimum of frictional loss, and also leaves the minimum quantity of water in store to deteriorate, for stored water will deteriorate, and besides, this small quantity of stored water is in more active condition, and far more frequently changed than in the case of such a reservoir as you now have in Ann Arbor.

The pumping station placed on one side of the city and the reservoir on the other side, with the distribution system between, at once doubles the actual cross section of the working mains, and at least quadruples their efficiency of service in emergencies.

Your reference to the 70 pounds pressure at Ypsilanti does not clearly explain the situation there. The gauge at the water office at Ypsilanti indicates 74 pounds with full reservoir, but this gauge is 55 feet above the city datum—which is river level at Congress st.—and 60 feet above the water works pumps. The pressure at the pumps at Ypsilanti is 100 pounds to the square inch.

You cannot expect effective service throughout the system at Ann Arbor with less than 100 pounds pressure at river level, this would give you about 75 pounds at the court house level, if I remember the elevations correctly.

I believe it would not be difficult to obtain as good a water supply at Ann Arbor as there is at Ypsilanti, and in the same way, and from similar strata.

W. R. COATS.

In answer to the criticisms of Mr. Coats, the superintendent of the water company, A. W. Hamilton, publishes the following:

To the Editor of the Times:

I find in Saturday's issue a letter from Mr. Coats, of Kalamazoo, in which he states that the engineering work for the Ann Arbor Water Co. was not properly done, that is, not done as he would have advised it to be done.

1st. He says he would have put the plant below the city as he did in Ypsilanti, (using the water veins which drain through the city for the city's water supply.) This might suit Mr. Coats, but it would not suit the good people of Ann Arbor.

2d. He says that the engineer made a great mistake in locating his reservoir so that all the water has to be pumped through the reservoir. In this he is mistaken. Only the surplus over what the city uses goes to the reservoir when the pumps are running, but here is the difference, our reservoir holds 2,200,000 gallons, while the one he built on top of the stone abutment at Ypsilanti holds 250,000 gallons, not enough to supply Ann Arbor two hours during the day if the pumps should stop.

3d. Mr. Coats is mistaken in saying that our pumps cannot be used for fire pressure. By shutting a single gate we can give the city direct pressure from our pumps. But all well informed engineers unite in saying that a steady pressure is much better for fire purposes as well as for domestic consumption.

The trouble at the Hamilton Park fire was not the water pressure or with our fire department, but was totally owing to the fact that the houses were over 2,000 feet away from a fire hydrant. Had there been a fire hydrant within 700 feet of the houses, the fire department would have saved all of the houses and kept the fire in the barn. If Mr. Coats will experiment with the Ypsilanti pressure through 2,500 feet of hose, perhaps he will find that his pressure is very light when he tries to extinguish a fire. The Ann Arbor Water Co. believes in the efficiency of their water system. It is in its seventh year and during all that time the firemen found the water pressure up to the standard when they have needed to use it. It will be kept good by the Water Company. I will say in closing, that the Water Company now intend to prevent the reckless and careless use of water during the summer months and hereafter the rules will be strictly enforced. The Water Co. will try to keep up with the growth of the city in the future, as it has in the past. It has to-day more miles of water mains and more water consumers in proportion to its population than any other city in the state, which ought to prove that Ann Arbor's water supply is at least popular with our own people.

Very respectfully,
A. W. HAMILTON, Supt.

Prof. Harrington Vindicated.

Under the above title the Washington Post of July 3d, gives the following article which the many friends of Prof. Harrington in this city will be glad to read:

"Prof. Harrington, chief of the Weather Bureau, has our congratulations. It must be said that a careful examination of the charges against him, and of the evidence brought forward to sustain them, had quite prepared us for the result, but of course an exoneration by his official superior is of more importance to Prof. Harrington than any quantity of unofficial conjectures could possibly be.

"It remains to be said only that Prof. Harrington has borne himself with remarkable dignity and moderation under circumstances that might well have extorted signs of irritation from a less completely balanced subject. The accusations were conspicuously frivolous, and the manner and the form in which they were passed would have excused, even if they did not justify, a much greater demonstration of resentment than he deigned to manifest. Prof. Harrington, however, contented himself with a very temperate policy of defense, and this has only served to emphasize and strengthen his vindication.

"There are to be radical and sweeping changes in the organization of the Weather Bureau, we hear. It is possible that these changes will involve Prof. Harrington. But, in the light of the events to which we refer, Prof. Harrington will retire, if at all, without a stigma or suspicion upon his record. He will take with him into any new field of usefulness he may conclude to enter, the respect and confidence of the country and the untarnished prestige of an honorable name."

First Step Toward Sewers.

Engineer Torrey, of the Michigan Central, was in the city yesterday afternoon to meet the representatives of the city and ascertain what favors the city wishes from the road in running the sewer over their ground. Prof. C. E. Greene, City Engineer Key, T. J. Keech, and Aldermen Martin and Manly, walked over the proposed line with Mr. Torrey and explained what concessions the city wished. Mr. Torrey considered the plan favorably, and stated that he would recommend to the company that the city be granted permission to build the sewer on the company's land according to the plan proposed. This is one of the first steps to be taken in the construction of the sewers, and after the Michigan Central gives the right of way over its property, the work of obtaining the right of way from citizens and building the sewers will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible, provided the present stringency in the money market does not prevent the floating of the bonds.

The School Board Meeting.

The regular meeting of the school board was held last evening, all the members being present except Messrs. Beal and Jacobs.

Bills amounting to $251.70 were reported and allowed.

The committee on teachers and text books recommended that the resignation of Miss Alice Hunt, teacher of drawing, be accepted, the recommendation being adopted, as was a further recommendation, that of Prof. Jabez Montgomery, be given charge of the instruction in botany and physiology in addition to his other duties. Miss L. Conrad was appointed assistant in botany at a pro rata salary of $600 per year. Miss Gertrude Breede was appointed instructor in French at a salary of $600 per year. The sum of $500 was appropriated to fit up the chemical laboratory.

The efforts that are being made in certain quarters to throw discredit on the veterans who are drawing pensions and to have the pension list cut down recall the old lines

"When war was threatening and danger was nigh,
God and the soldier was the people's cry;
When war was over and all things were righted,
God was forgotten and the soldier was slighted."

Never, in the history of this nation, has there been such a rare opportunity for the display of statesmanship as there will be at the special session of congress. Will the statesmen rise to the occasion?

It looks as though Senator Done Brown Hill, of New York, had come out as a free silverite. Heretofore he has been a very shrewd man, but the shrewdest of political tricksters stub their toes and tumble occasionally.

It is announced that Cleveland is anxious to get the money question out of the way so that he can attack the McKinley tariff. Having partly wrecked the country he wants to make the job complete.—N. Y. Press.

The Chicago Inter Ocean very sagely remarks: "Secretary Carlisle gives notice that we will have free wool within six months. Mutton will be cheap. Australian wool growers can kill off American sheep and then put the prices to suit themselves."

Col. William R. Morrison says he hasn't found anybody favoring the proposed income tax who thinks he will himself have to pay anything. A great many people endure with fortitude the taxation of their neighbors.—Salt Lake Herald.

We'll wager an apple against a jack-knife that the coming special session of congress will accomplish nothing in the way of relieving the nation from its present financial distress. The trouble with that body is it is not built right.

There is just as much confidence now as there was before Cleveland was elected, but it is of a different kind among business men. It is confidence now that it was a big mistake to elect the democratic candidate last fall.—Buffalo Commercial.

Will congress take the government crutches out from under the silver dollar and let the white metal stand or fall on its own worth? Or will it keep on making the people offer this brazen prayer: "In God we trust;" for the other 40 cents?

And Mrs. Frank Leslie is going to blossom out with a fifth husband! This time it is to be a Marquis—pronounce it markee, please. She may not find it so easy getting rid of this fellow. His full cognomen is given as Marquis de Leuville. She's a tiger-ess.

The Washington Star, Independent, hoists this ticket for 1896: For President—Gov. Altgeld, of Illinois.

For Vice President—Gov. Pennoyer, of Oregon.

Platform: "We're agin the government."

The Boston Journal says: "That is an interesting statement of young Spreckles, that before he left Honolulu there was a 'demonstration,' and the people cheered the names of President Cleveland and Claus Spreckles. That was a significant combination."

The English and Canadians are up to their old tricks again of harassing our fishermen. They knew better than to fool with them when Harrison was president. They think now that a free trade president will not trouble them any. Whether he will or not remains to be seen.

Every man now employed in the naval records office at Washington is a democrat, and every official engaged in compiling the naval records of the rebellion is a southerner, some of whom are ex-Confederates, with Secretary Herbert at their head. How valuable do you suppose those records will be?

There are 3,000,000 bachelors in the United States. There must be a holiday in heaven if that's where marriages are made.—Augusta Chronicle. Are we not told that it is one continual holiday in that place? Get the old bachelors there and it would reverse the nature of it entirely.

They had a big time in Honolulu on the 4th of July, and a grand celebration even if the Treason-Stained Blount did refuse to be present, and did haul down the American flag. The Americans there are patriots, who are not to be crushed by the extreme pomposity of "my commissioner."

Had the republican party been successful last November, and the sound financial and commercial policy of this government been assured, for the next four years, does any one think for a moment that the present commercial distrust and business failures and distress would have happened? Not much.

Ex-Senator Eustis, of Louisiana, is the new ambassador of the United States to France. On the 4th of July he declined to hold the regular official reception in honor of the birthday of the nation he represents (and once attempted to destroy) giving some trivial excuse as a reason. The American colony at Paris were much chagrined and mortified over his unpatriotic action. It is not surprising that such men should do such deeds.

Most men want to be as rich as most women want to be beautiful.

People who don't want any children around are going to find heaven an uncomfortable style on earth.

Talking of patent medicines—you know the old prejudice. And the doctors—some of them are between you and us. They would like you to think that what's cured thousands won't cure you. You'd believe in patent medicines if they didn't profess to cure everything—and so, between the experiments of doctors, and the experiments of patent medicines that are sold only because there's money in the "stuff," you lose faith in everything.

And, you can't always tell the prescription that cures by what you read in the papers. So, perhaps, there's no better way to sell a remedy, than to tell the truth about it, and take the risk of its doing just what it professes to do.

That's what the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., does with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

If they don't do what their makers say they'll do—you get your money back.

World's Fair Beauty Show.

More than 5,000 people visit the "Beauty Show" at the World's Fair every day when the weather is fine. If this ratio is kept up, and there seems to be no reason to expect that it will not be, the number of visitors will surely reach 10,000 to 15,000 a day when the crowds that are confidently counted on put in their appearance at the Fair.

The "Beauty Show," as it is almost universally called, is one of the novel and attractive of the special features of the Exposition. These special attractions are situated on both sides of Midway Plaisance, a portion of the Exposition grounds, 600 feet wide and extending from the Woman's building westward for nearly a mile. In this strip of territory visitors may see gathered together a greater number of different nationalities and more variety of strange things than can be found assembled anywhere else on earth. Everyone who goes to the Fair takes in the sights on Midway. It is the chance of a lifetime, and almost as instructive and entertaining as a couple of years of foreign travel.

But to return to the "Beauty Show." That, by the way, is not the technical name. It is catalogued as the "International Dress and Costume Exhibit," and to this name its managers have added "World's Congress of Beauty." As a beauty show, it far transcends anything ever before attempted in that direction, and, it is believed, is the first exhibition of the sort possessing genuineness in the claim of being international.

It took faith on the part of the financial backers of the enterprise to carry it out, for the exhibit as it stands to-day, represents an expenditure of over $50,000. But the result show that they knew what they were about. Thus far no other Midway attraction has drawn as well as this. It catches the crowd, both of men and women, and all who see it commend it to their friends.

The "Beauty Show" occupies a whole building by itself, and has pleasant surroundings. The building is 48x145 feet, two stories high, and is covered with staff like all the other Exposition buildings, thus having the appearance of being built of white marble.

What do the beauties do? Well, the principal thing they do is to be looked at. Some do fancy work of one sort or another, some read, some spin, make embroidery, or engage in other light occupation, such as they are accustomed to at home. Nearly all chat freely with visitors, and answer their many questions which are propounded. They are paid a great many compliments, of course, and these they receive graciously if they are offered courteously. Occasionally a rude or ill-mannered person receives a squelching, which generally causes him to make haste from the vicinity.

At the end of the hall, opposite the entrance, is an oriental or harem scene in which there are five dark-eyed beauties lounging on divans or otherwise disposed in accord with the languid habits of the far East.

The costumes of the orientals are exceedingly gorgeous and rich. Three of the girls—an English, French and American—wear Worth gowns. These naturally excite the enthusiastic admiration of all the visitors of the gentler sex. The gowns cost from $1,000 to $1,500 each, and are the finest that the famous Paris costumer could make. The material was made especially for him and could not be duplicated elsewhere. This is Worth's only exhibit at the Fair, he having declined a request from the French Commission, and also one from Mrs. Potter Palmer, president of the Board of Lady Managers, to make an exhibit in their departments.

The officials of the Board of Health are busy trying to clean up the city and rid the citizens of the various odors that arise in the summer. They have plenty of work before them. One of the nuisances which prevail in Ann Arbor, and one that the authorities should take steps to remedy, is the presence of young loafers on the street corners every Sunday afternoon. The editors of nearly all the local papers are doing the World's Fair this week, and their papers are being run by "subs." Capt. C. E. Hiscock, of the Ann Arbor Light Infantry, on Saturday forwarded his resignation as commander of the company, through the proper military channels to Governor Rich. He was the head and founder of the banking firms of Drexel & Co., Philadelphia; Drexel, Morgan & Co., N. Y.; and Drexel, Hargis & Co., Paris, France. In financial affairs he was wonderfully successful. As a philanthropist he was at the head of Americans, having devoted the later years of his life quite as much to deeds of philanthropy and charity, as to business. He was probably worth $15,000,000 or $20,000,000.

The Chronic Kicker.

[From the Cincinnati Times.]
Some folks is always kickin' And raisin' of a storm; In summer time they mope and whine, and say "It's Too Blamed Warm!"
And then when winter comes along, They shawl and snap and scold, And won't go out—but sit about—because "It's Too Blamed Cold!"
And in the fall they're just as bad, And grumble, swear and jaw; They're always quick to make a kick, and say "It's Too Blamed Raw!"
But if you meet him on the street, There's one thing I've admired; When asked to drink, he'll never shrink, and say "It's Too Blamed Tired!"
"Where are you going my pretty maid?" "I go to the World's Fair, sir," she said.
"May I go with you, my pretty maid?" "They're plenty of freaks there now," she said.

EVERY ONE HAD MONEY.

It so happened that there was an equal distribution of wealth, and every one had $1,000,000—no more and no less.

Of course, under the circumstances, there was no incentive to work, unless a man enjoyed working. There was certainly nothing to induce a man to do any manual labor unless it was ordered by a physician—and, come to think of it, there was no reason why a physician should continue his labors unless he was a humanitarian. In consequence, nearly everyone decided to live a life of luxurious ease. A few, in whom the habits of work were still strong, were willing to continue, but there was no opportunity for them.

The president of a big manufacturing concern was rather desirous of keeping the plant running, and the directors thought it a good scheme, too, but the factory hands couldn't see it that way.

"I think I'll take a little vacation," said one of them. "I've been working pretty hard and I need a rest. After a while I'll start up in business for myself."

"But who'll you get to work for you?" asked the president. "All the other men are making the same plans you are."

"Um! Well, I hadn't thought of that," replied the workman. "Still I don't mind work, and if the proper inducements are offered I may go back to work myself after a little rest."

"What would you call a proper inducement?"

"Can't say exactly without some thought, but I think I might accept $100 a day. You can't expect a millionaire to work in a factory for any less."

So the factory was shut down, temporarily, and the employees went home. And it so happened that one of the men thought he would go down town, and he told his wife he would run over and catch a car at the corner and possibly go to the theatre. But there were no cars running, and when he finally asked some one about it, the man replied:

"Why, you don't suppose a millionaire is going to drive a street car, do you? Not much. Most of the old drivers are thinking of starting street car lines of their own."

"Well, I can get a cab, anyway," thought the ex-factory hand, and he went over to another corner and woke a cabman up.

"A mile and a half," said the latter reflectively, after he had learned the destination; "well, call it $30. I ought not to be out here, anyway, but I have got so used to sleeping on the cab that I don't feel comfortable in bed."

Now the ex-factory hand didn't propose to be "gouged" like that, and being a millionaire for the first time, he didn't want to walk, so he went home and told his wife that if prices kept increasing, the $1,000,000 would probably last them a month or two.

"Better invest it," she said. "Put part of it in the bank and invest the rest so that we will get some revenue from it."

He thought that a good scheme, and the next day he tramped down town to a bank and found the president and one or two of the directors sitting there in solitary state.

"Can't take any deposit," said the president, regretfully.

"What's the matter?" asked the ex-factory hand.

"Matter!" exclaimed the president. "You don't suppose we can afford to hire millionaire bank clerks, do you? Some of the boys intend to go to Europe for a few months, and some are planning to start banks of their own after they have laid off a while."

"I believe I'd take a trip myself if I only knew where to put some of this money while I am gone," said the ex-factory hand, thoughtfully.

"What are you afraid of?" asked the president.

"I might be robbed."

"Robbed!" laughed the president. "Who do you suppose would rob you when every one has all the money he needs? But how do you expect to travel?"

"On a railroad train, of course."

The president laughed again.

"That would be a unique experience," he said. "Think of traveling on a train that had a millionaire for a conductor, a millionaire for a brakeman, a millionaire for an engineer and a millionaire for a porter. I'd like to take such a trip myself if the trains were running."

"Aren't they?"

"Is the factory you used to work in running?"

"No-o."

The ex-factory hand tramped back home in a thoughtful mood. He had $1,000,000, but somehow it didn't seem to be of much service to him. Some of the shopkeepers, who owned their own shops, were ready to do a little business, but the employees had all left, and in some places prices had gone up. In others the shopkeeper said he hadn't raised prices because he was anxious to sell out and close up. He stopped at one of the big department stores to get something for his wife, and was told by a man sitting in the doorway that it was closed because there were not enough people left to run it.

"I'm one of the firm," he said; "but I don't know when we will open again. If you want to get anything in particular you can go in and one of my partners or head of some department—one or two of them are left—will try to hunt it up for you. The rest have all gone. They want to buy, not sell from now on."

"The closing scenes were ludicrous, too," he added. "We began getting notices immediately after the distribution of wealth, although some of the clerks agreed to stay a day or so. But when the ribbon counter girl put on her hat and her cloak and began pricing the goods in the cloak department, the girls quit their work and pretty soon everybody in the store was buying and no one selling. I stepped into the breach, lifted the prices a little and made a tidy little sum all by my lonely. I think it likely that I can stand it as long as the rest of them."

When the ex-factory hand reached home he found his wife much perturbed.

"I thought that we could afford to keep a servant, now that we're rich," she said, "but I can't get one."

"Can't get one?" he exclaimed.

"No; you can't expect a millionaire's daughter to work in the kitchen for $5 a week. The first girl I went to was looking for work last week, but to-day she offered me $10 a week to go to work for her. It looks to me as if we were worse off than we were before. We've got to do all our own work and haven't even street cars to ride on."

"Never mind," he said soothingly. "We'll get a carriage and horse."

"Where'll you keep it?" she asked.

"I'll have a barn built," he said.

"Who'll you get to build it? Do you expect a lot of millionaires to drive nails for you for $4 or $5 a day?"

"I never thought of that."

"And who'll you get to take care of the horses and drive them?"

The ex-factory hand looked troubled and his wife continued:

"I might as well tell you that we are all out of bread, and there's not a loaf left at the baker's, and his men have all quit, so he's not making any more."

"Well, you'll have to make some yourself."

"Then you'll have to go and get the flour. There's a place about half a mile away where the man who owns the shop still has some flour that he is selling by the barrel, but you will have to roll the barrel home yourself. You can't get any one to deliver it. We want some coal, too."

"But how am I going to get it?"

"Well, I understand the man who owns the yards nearest here will sell it to you, and if you buy or rent a wagon and team, load the wagon and drive the horses yourself, you can get all that we have room for."

"Seems to me that we are worse off than we were when we were poor," he grumbled, as he put $10,000 in his pocket and started out to make the purchases.

On the way he met an old man with gray hair and whiskers, trudging along and carrying a big carpet-bag.

"Can you tell me where I can find a good hotel?" asked the stranger.

"I don't believe there are any left open," replied the ex-factory hand.

"Oh, I guess they are doing business on the same plan that others I have come across are," said the stranger.

"How is that?"

"Well, the proprietor is on hand, and he will rent you a room if you will make up your own bed and cook your own meals. I have made up two beds and cooked five meals since I left home, and paid a pretty good sum for the privilege."

"Where did you come from?"

"About thirty miles out in the country. I've got a nice farm out there, but the help all quit, and as I am a rich man now, I thought I'd move into the city where I could enjoy life a bit. No trains running, so I had to walk. What's going on at the theatres?"

"Nothing. Only a few actors and no stage hands will work."

"Well, there must be something going on. I wonder where I can get a newspaper?"

"There hasn't been one published for two or three days. Composers, pressmen, stereotypers, reporters and clerks, I understand, are all planning to start in business for themselves."

"I don't see that I'm any better off here than I was on the farm," said the stranger, thoughtfully.

When the ex-factory hand got back home with a barrel of flour on top of his load of coal he was apparently troubled.

"Mary," he said, as he tried to get the coal dust off his face and hands, "it seems to me mighty funny that the people who had money before are about the only ones who are willing to work now. The man who owned the coal yard was willing to give me a lift in loading the wagon, the head of the dry goods firm was willing to wait on me, and the man who owned the grocery store was willing to help get the flour on the wagon. They were ready to work in their line of business."

"Perhaps," said his wife, "the reason they were rich before was because they were willing to work when they had money."

Now it struck the ex-factory hand that there might be some truth in that, and, after thinking the matter over, he went back and got some more coal and some more flour. Then he rented a barn a few doors away and put his horse in it. He had to look after the horse himself, as no millionaire was going to play hostler for him, but he was rather glad to have something to do.

Now such a state of affairs could not last very long. Whether millionaires or not, people had to have supplies, even if they had to carry them home in baskets, and it wasn't a great while before every one in the neighborhood discovered that the ex-factory hand would not only sell them supplies but would deliver them himself, and he had a great rush of trade.

"Might just as well do this as to sit in the alleyway and smoke a pipe all day," he said. "There's just as much fun in one thing as another, and besides it makes that million of mine get bigger instead of smaller."

And so it happened that there were other people in other localities doing the same thing. And—well, given two men, one spending money and the other earning it, and every one knows what the result will be. The farmer woke up one day to the realization of the fact that his wealth was fast dwindling away. People who still stuck to their stores had raised prices also.

"Production has ceased," they said, "and we are not particularly anxious to sell. There is no telling when we may want the stuff ourselves."

The farmer scratched his head, thought the matter over for half a day, and then went out and bought a horse and wagon and started back for his farm.

"I reckon," he said as he drove back, "that there are some folks that are going to want wheat and corn and vegetables awful bad before long, and that the man that's got 'em is going to be a pretty big gun. There is nothing to amuse a fellow in the city now, anyhow."

A few other men got the same idea. Some were farmers, and some were in other lines of business. Of course, there were no employees, and when a man did go to work, he had to work for himself and do all the work alone, except in one or two instances where partnerships were formed.

Things got started again slowly and in a very primitive way. One man, who felt that hanging heavily on his hands, hired a street car and some horses to begin making regular trips on one of the street car lines. He had to look after the horses himself, and he made the fare fifty cents, a very reasonable sum under the circumstances. He only made three round trips a day, but he took in $50 or $60 a trip, and carried his money home in a sack every night. Then other people followed his example.

It was long before any "L" or steam railroad trains were running, because it required more men to run them, and things had to reach a point where one man was willing to enter the employment of another before anything could be done. That time came, however, and gradually everything was started again. Of course wages were higher than they were before, but so was everything else, and times were hard—very hard. There seemed to be a shortage of nearly everything, and a man with only a hundred dollars was poorer than a man with only ten dollars had been under previous conditions.

Of course, when everything got going again things eased up a little, and when a man had a chance to look around a little he found that some people were poor, some were in moderate circumstances and some were rich. In fact, the conditions were the same as they had been before the distribution of wealth.

"All may be equal in heaven," said the philosopher, who found he had $4.33 left of his $1,000,000, "but on earth we can't all be bosses, and it strikes me that the man who works when he doesn't have to, all other things being equal, is the man who doesn't have to work when he doesn't want to, provided, of course, that he is not in a chronic state of not wanting to. Some people are rich now who were not before, and some are poor who had money before, but I can't see that the rest of us have succeeded in securing anything except a brief vacation."—Ex.

Among the Trees.

The best apples, and most of them, are grown where the trees are given constant or frequent cultivation. We have excellent results, and recommended the practice, from two or three years in succession of cultivation followed by a like time in grass. In many respects this rotation works better than continual cultivation. The grass sod turned over and decomposed contributes vegetable matter to the soil, thus keeping it porous and light, and in the best condition possible to receive all manures applied, and appropriate to the production of fruit. No one need be afraid of injuring trees by plowing when it is properly done.

Young trees set the past spring should be hoed as carefully and regularly as a cabbage plant, and the surface soil around them should be frequently stirred to prevent its crustifying over. Treatment of this kind is better than mulch. It is no use to set out fruit trees and let them go without attention. Further care and more liberal fertilization bestowed on the trees now growing will in most cases bring more fruit to the owner than the setting of more trees.

Apple trees are to-day (June 9th) full in blossom. This is about the average date though the season has been called late, and is so emphatically when measured by the work accomplished. The blossom is quite general, certainly enough for a full crop of fruit. The Baldwin shows the least promise of any one kind, though other conditions favorable, there is enough blossom on these to bring forth a good crop.

Spraying is next in order. There is little chance to doubt that spraying properly done will reduce the work of the codling moth. The first application should be made as soon as the fruit sets, which will be within a few days from the present time. It is the active, wide-awake fruit grower, who is up with the times in all his practices, who grows the best fruit and gets the most of it.—Maine Farmer.

People With a Low Sense of Duty.

A low sense of duty is essentially vulgar. The people who look upon pleasure and selfish indulgence as beyond the sterner law and higher standard of duty are people who are vulgar at the core, no matter what their outside bearing or conventionalized grace. These are people who ridicule all idea of that higher law and maintain the impracticability of those councils of perfection at which we ought at least to aim. Self interest with them ranks before justice to others, and to keep a promise to their own hurt strikes them as about the most ridiculous bit of Quixotism possible.

There is no good in going to these vulgar souls when your own is oppressed with the sense of weakness in the face of a nobler duty. They will counsel you to take your ease on the lower levels, and they will argue against that endeavor of yours to mount and soar upward into the purer regions of a faithful but in a sense an abstract duty. Consult them not, lest you, too, be dragged down into their vulgar estimate of self before the right.—London Queen.

The Value of the River Thames.

In connection with the value of the river Thames to the mercantile interests of the English metropolis, a good story is related of James I. and the lord mayor of London. James, as was often the case during his reign, was upon a certain occasion in great need of money, and he applied to the corporation of London for the loan of £20,000. This gentle request the corporation refused, upon which the king, in high dudgeon, sent for the lord mayor and the chief of the aldermen, and having scolded them severely for what he was pleased to term their disloyalty, he insisted upon their raising the money for him.

"Please your majesty," said the lord mayor, "we cannot lend you what we have not got."

"You must get it," declared the king.

"We cannot," said the mayor.

"I'll compel you!" cried James, with a stamp of his foot.

"But your majesty cannot compel us to do that which is beyond our power," retorted the mayor, boldly. "No!" exclaimed the king angrily. "Then I'll ruin your city forever. I'll make a desert of Westminster. I'll remove my whole court—law, parliament and all—to York, and then what will become of you?"

"Please your majesty," replied the lord mayor, with a submissive bow, "you will remove your courts and yourself whenever you please, but there is still left one consolation for us poor merchants of London—you cannot take the Thames along with you!"

James did not remove his courts.—New York Ledger.

Fame, Wealth, Life, Death.

What is fame?
'Tis the sun gleam on the mountain
Spreading brightly ere it flies,
'Tis the bubble of the fountain
Rising lightly ere it dries.
Or, if here and there a hero
Be remembered through the years,
Yet to him the gain is zero:
Death hath still'd his hopes and fears.
Yet what danger men will dare
If but only in the air
May be heard some eager mention of their name.
Though they hear it not themselves, 'tis much the same.
What is wealth?
As the panting fool pursues,
Or a toy that, youth unheeding,
Seeks the readiest way to lose.
But the wise man keeps due measure,
Neither out of breath nor base;
He but holds in trust his treasure
For the welfare of the race.
Yet what crimes some men will dare
To get the slender share
In some profit, though with loss of name or health.
What is life?
'Tis the earthly hour of trial
For a life that's but begun,
When the prize of self denial
May be quickly lost or won;
'Tis the hour when love may bourgeon
To an everlasting flower,
Or when lusts their victims urge on
To a defiling power.
Yet how lightly men ignore
All the future holds in store.
Spending brief but golden moments all in strife,
Or in suicidal madness grasp the knife.
What is death?
Past its dark, mysterious portal
Human eye may never roam;
Yet the hope still springs immortal
That it leads the wanderer home.
Oh, the bliss that lies before us
When the secret shall be known,
And the vast angelic chorus
Sounds the hymn before the throne!
What is fame or wealth or life?
Past are praises, fortune, strife;
All but love, that lives forever, cast beneath
When the good and faithful servant takes the wreath.
—London Academy.

The Model Husband.

Most wives will end their story with,
"Ah, well, men are but human!"
I long to tell the secret of
A truly happy woman.
Through all the sunshine lighted years,
Lived now in retrospection,
My husband's word brought never tears
Nor caused a sad reflection.
What'er the burdens of the day,
Unflinching, calm and steady,
To bear his part—the larger half—I
Always find him ready.
Housecleaning season brings no frown,
No sarcasm pointed keenly;
Through carpets up and tacks head down
He makes his way serenely.
Our evenings pass in converse sweet
Or quiet contemplation.
We never disagree except
To "keep up conversation."
And dewy morn of radiant June,
Fair moonlight of September,
April with bird and brook atune,
Stern, pitiless December—
Each seems to my adoring eyes
Some new grace to discover,
For he, unchanging through the years,
Is still my tender lover.
So life no shadow holds, though we
Have reached the side that's shady.
My husband? Oh, a dream is he,
And I'm a maiden lady!
—Eleanor M. Denny.

The Merit of the Deed.

The painter paints a picture of the summer sky of blue,
But he cannot steal the rainbow lights from the smallest drop of dew;
But the painter makes his picture from the Master Artist's own,
And he takes his brightest coloring where His faintest tints have shown.
The poet writes a poem in a dream of summer hours,
But he cannot steal the sweetness from the humblest of the flowers;
So the poet writes a poem, and because his eyes are sealed
Sees not a glimmer of the glory which he fain would have revealed.
The singer sings a song in the golden summer tide,
But the wild bird of the morning into sweeter notes can glide;
So the singer sings a song and knoweth not its lay,
Is the silence of the echoes that in heaven died away.
Thus it seems the fireless worker who ne'er taketh needed rest,
And the hand that giveth liberally and giveth of its best,
Each gives the widow's mite to the world of want and need,
And the love which prompts the giving is the merit of the deed.
—Manchester (N. H.) Union.

Enslavement.

All constraint
Except what wisdom lays on evil men
Is evil; hurts the faculties, impedes
Their progress in the road of science; blinds
The sight of discovery and begets
In those that suffer it a sordid mind,
Bestial, a meager intellect, unfit
To be the tenant of man's noble form.
—Cowper.

The Baby.

It's a sweet and tiny treasure,
A torment and a tease;
It's an autocrat and anarchist—
Two awful things to please!
It's a rest and peace disturber,
With little laughing ways;
It's a wailing human night alarm
And terror of your days.
—Voice.

Vim, Not Size.

Size counts for naught in poet, sage or dunce;
Vim makes the hero in his rank or rhyme;
Old Samson brought the house down only once,
What Doctor Holmes has done a thousand.
Gauge your own caliber, O man alive—
If Samson, ten feet high, or poet, five.
—James B. Wiggins.

The Best Revenge is Love; Disarm

Anger with smiles; heal wounds with balm;
Give water to thy thirsty foe.
The sandal tree, as if to prove
How sweet to conquer hate by love,
Perfumes the air that lays it low.

Moith-proof—The ruin they leave behind.

GEMS IN VERSE.

Wanted—A Situation.

If anybody ask me what's the thing I'd ratherest do,
I could have my pick o' jobs,
I guess the work my nature would the soonest tackle to
Is shellin' corn an' pillin' up the cobs.
I'd want the corn fetched in an' blatted afore it got its growth.
An' left to dreen while upon a platter.
An' I'd want some salt an' butter, an' a plenty of 'em both—
Especially a plenty of the latter.
Ef anybody knows a man 'at wants to hire a hand
Tosshell his corn an' furnish the machine,
Jes' tell 'em 'e can git me if the job is stiddy an' the corn is billed when it is proper green.

The Coming Poem.

All motion is rhythm, says wise Herbert Spencer,
A sage so immense that no sage is immenser,
All the worlds wobble on with a rhythmical teeter
And the universe whirls on its mystical meter.
The sage sees the stars, and their rhythmic orbits show him
That the world is a verse and the Cosmos a poem.
The torn sea that surges with wreck scattered trophies
Beats out its great theme in tumultuous strophes;
The blind winds that blow from the caverns of chaos,
Or the zephyrs of twilight that sooth and allay us,
The rivers that leap from the high precipices
Whose foam banners wave o'er the startled abysses,
Or the gay brook that makes the long lilies grow sweeter—
All these, one and all, are a part of the meter.
And all lives are a poem; some wild and cyclonic
With verities of cynical bluster Byronic;
And some still flow on in perpetual benison,
As perfect and smooth as a stanza from Tennyson;
And some find huge boulders their current to hinder,
And are broken and bent like the poems of Pindar;
And some a deep base of proud mists are built on—
The calm ocean swell of the epic of Milton;
And some roll on with a freedom completer
In Whitman's chaotic, tumultuous meter.
But most lives are mixed like Shakespearean dramas,
Where the king speaks heroics, the idiot stammers,
Where the old man gives counsel, the young man loves hotly;
Where the king wears his crown and the fool wears his motley;
Where the lord treats his hall and the peasant his hearth;
And in the fifth act they all exit together—
And the drama goes out with its pomp and its thunder,
And we weep, and we laugh, and we listen and wonder!
—S. W. Foss.

A Change of Taste.

When he was youth and she was maid
Full oft he would declare
He loved to see her charms displayed
In setting rich and rare.
The costliest lace, the gayest plume,
The quaintest brocaded stuff,
The choicest fabric of the loom
Was hardly choice enough.
Years pass, and Angelina's life
With Edwin's now is blest,
And—ho a husband, she a wife—
His tastes are different.
Simplicity, he says, is best—
Away with vulgar show!
She shines the fairest when she's dressed
In eight cent calico.
—New York Herald.

The Undertow.

You hadn't ought to blame a man fer things he hasn't done,
Fer books he hasn't written or fer fights he hasn't won;
The waters may look placid on the surface all around,
An' yet there may be an undertow a-keepin' of him down.
Since the days of Eve an' Adam, when the fig of life began,
It ain't been safe, my brethren, fer to lightly judge a man;
He may be tryin' faithful fer to make his life a go,
An' yet his feet git tangled in the treacherous undertow.
He may not lack in learnin', an' he may not want fer brains;
He may be always workin' with the patientest of pains,
An' yet go unrewarded, an' my friends, how can we know
What heights he might climbed up to but fer the undertow?
You've heard the Yankee story of the hen's nest with a hole,
An' how the hen kept layin' eggs with all her might an' soul,
Yet never got a settin', not a single egg, I trow;
That hen was simply kickin' 'gin a hidden undertow.
There's holes in lots of hen's nests, an' you've got to peep below
To see the eggs a-rollin' where they hadn't ought to go.
Don't blame a man fer fallin' to achieve a laurel crown
Until you're sure the undertow ain't draggin' of him down.
—Carrie Blake Morgan.

The Years.

The years are all alike. With childish laughter
They follow butterflies with endless wings;
They peer into the birds' nests; they look after white lambs and other pretty little things.
Then in the first flush of their youth they bring us
Shy gifts of violets in a gallant way;
And ah! what charming, low love songs they sing us
From leaf green shadows where the wild doves stay.
But somewhat later they show bearded faces,
And away the scythe and bear the shears about
In the hot fields, and quite forget the graces
They had of old—as others do, no doubt.
Still later they go out for us and gather
The scarlet fruit in, and the yellow corn,
Or walk aloft 'neath the withering woods with rather
A faded look, and sigh and seem forlorn.
Then they sit still and watch the dying embers
Behind the curtain in some picture room,
While each one somewhere in his heart remembers
The dew, the summer moonrise and the bloom.
Then comes the last night watch, the lone-some tapers,
The few tears of the many prayers quick said,
The black lined columns in the morning papers,
And, yes—the many virtues of the dead.
—S. M. B. Platt.

The Babe.

Naked, on parent's knees, a newborn child,
Weeping then sat'st when all around thee smiled;
So live that, sinking to thy last long sleep,
Thou then may'st smile while all around thee weep.
—Sir William Jones.

Then at the balance let's be mute—
We never can adjust it;
What's one we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted.
—Burns.

A trial trip—Disagreement of the jury.

WAR'S DESOLATION.

In Assuacion the Women Outnumber the Men Seven to One.

The old town presents a half oriental half medieval appearance—its few splendid palaces, which belong to the late dictators and their families and favorites, sandwiched among huts of mud and cane, with bark roofs and one window apiece. Palms, bananas, passion flowers and other tropical plants and blooms abound—but you meet few people, and those are mostly women. The grassy streets, according to a Paraguay correspondent, have a sad, deserted look, constantly reminding one that the sons and husbands and lovers and brothers perished on the battlefields or died of starvation in hiding, or rotted in prison, as thousands did who were ignorant even of what they were accused, or were tortured and murdered by the three tyrants who ruled and ruined the country. Here women do the work that in other parts of the world is monopolized by the stronger sex—such as cleaning the streets, loading the ships, driving the ox carts, cultivating the fields, carrying on the markets, etc., and it is said that during the long, hard war, they made the best and bravest soldiers. Naturally, where men are in the proportion of one to seven, they are at a higher premium than elsewhere, and in Paraguay they are figuratively kept in cotton-wool by their admiring female relatives.

REMINISCENCES OF NAPOLEON.

The Great Man Was Furious Over the Marriage of His Brother.

I never saw Bonaparte in such wrath as when he learned that his brother Lucien had married at Senlis the widow of Joubert, a Paris broker. He ordered me, says a writer in Century, to send for the notary and tell him to bring his register. When the notary arrived I took him to St. Cloud at nine in the morning. Here is word for word the dialogue between the first consul and the notary: "Was it you, sir, who registered my brother's marriage?" "Yes, citizen first consul." "Were you unaware, then, that he was my brother?" "No, citizen first consul." "Did you not know that my consent was necessary to the validity of the act?" "I do not think so. Your brother has long been of age, he has filled high posts, he has been a minister and ambassador, he has no father, he is free to marry." "But he has a mother whose consent was necessary?" "No; he is of age and a widower." "But I am a sovereign, and as such my consent was necessary." "You are a sovereign only for ten years, and your family is not bound to you." "Show me the marriage register?" "Here it is." The first consul read it, and in shutting the book was very near tearing the page. "I shall annul it." "That will be difficult, for it is carefully drawn up." "Be off with you." The notary retired without having for a moment lost his composure.

SHE HAD A FIGHTING PARTNER.

French Women Journalists Have Masculine Side Partners for Dueling Purposes.

A rather curious institution is arising in Paris, that of dueling associates of lady journalists. Recently, says the London News, the lady known as Mme. Severine, who was intimately connected as a friend, literary helper, and disciple of M. Jules Valles, contributed an article to the Journal at which a M. Massard, a socialist, took offense. He called on M. Xau, the editor, to ask for satisfaction. It being impossible to call Mme. Severine out the answer was that, in virtue of a fiction adopted for the purpose of releasing M. Xau from all responsibility in such cases, Mme. Severine was supposed to be the joint author with M. Labryere of all her articles. He had agreed to be answerable for any offense she might give. M. Massard then sent seconds to M. Labryere, who, admitting that he was the fighting partner of the lady, referred him to a couple of male friends. The duel, which has taken place, was a fierce affair. It was fought with fisticuffs. In the second round M. Labryere received a cut on the chin, but the doctors saying it did not signify, there were five other rounds. The combat was ended by M. Massard running his foil through the forearm of M. Labryere. Honor was then declared satisfied, and M. Labryere was driven back to Paris.

TO HAVE FUN WITH BEES.

Just Try If This Story Is Really Based on Scientific Truth.

It is a fact not generally known, says Science, that if one holds his breath wasps, bees and hornets can be handled with impunity. The skin becomes stinging proof, and by holding the insect by the feet and giving her full liberty of action you can see her drive her weapon against the impenetrable surface with a force that lifts her body at every stroke; but let the smallest quantity of air escape from the lungs and the sting will penetrate at once. I have never seen an exception to this in twenty-five years' observation.

A Million Friends.

A friend in need is a friend indeed, and not less than one million people have found such a friend in Dr. King's New Discovery for Constipation, Colds and Coughs. If you have never used this Great Cough Medicine, one trial will convince you that it has wonderful curative powers in all diseases of Throat, Chest, and Lungs. Each bottle is guaranteed to do all that is claimed or money will be refunded. Trial bottles free at Eberbach & Son's Drugstore, and Geo. T. Haussler, Manchester.

If a child cries because he goes to bed in the dark, he must be humored and given a light, according to the latest scientific theory. Modern psychologists have discovered that children are subject to hallucinations, and that their imagination that they "see things" is very vivid and real. They should not be "disciplined" or punished, but given means to lessen these fears.

Coughing Leads to Consumption.—Kemp's Balsam stops the cough at once.

What Makes a Gentleman.

It is well for womankind to be up to the national term "gentleman." Members of the sex, when touring over the world, may find it handy to understand just what sort of thing is meant by this supposed refined degree of the "animal man." In Russia they say he drinks like a gentleman; in France, he acts like a gentleman; in Spain, he makes love like a gentleman; in Germany, he eats like a gentleman; in Turkey, he smells like a gentleman; in America, he spends his money like a gentleman.

Very Gracefully Done.

When Lord Erskine was made a member of that highly honorable body, the Fishmongers' company, of London, he made an after-dinner speech on the occasion of his first appearance among them as a member. Upon his return he said to a friend: "I spoke ill to-day, and stammered and hesitated in the opening." "You certainly floundered," was the reply, "but I thought you did so in compliment to the fishmongers."

When you're languid and dull in the spring of the year,
When stomach and liver are all out of gear,
When you're stupid at morn and feverish at night,
Don't try any nostrum, elixer, or pill—
"Golden Medical Discovery" just fills the bill.

The surest and best of all remedies for all disorders of the liver, stomach and blood, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Educational Ghosts.

No man to-day can practice any of the higher arts to the best effect, unless he knows the history of that art. Our life becomes extemporized and fragmentary unless each man, taking up his work in the world, not merely attaches his work to the work of those who went before him and begins where they left off, but also knows something of the way in which he adds a part of one consistent and intelligible progress. We want to know the blunders men have made, that we may not make them over again; we want to know what they have achieved, that we may help to carry forward their successes towards their full result. Let me remind you what are some of the values that belong to the study of the history of education. First, there is the great general value of experience. To know what other men have done in the department where you have been set to work will make it unnecessary that you should go over again what they have already done. The student of the history of education finds to his great surprise, that many of the educational ideas of his own time, which seem to him all fresh and new, were found out long ago, were used awhile, and then were lost again, only to be re-discovered at this later day. A wiser study of educational history would have made this discovery unnecessary, and so saved time and strength. If every generation has to begin and prove over again that two times two is four, what generation will ever get beyond the proof that ten times ten is 100? And then, again, to know how different studies came to be introduced would often throw great light upon the values of those studies. There can be no doubt that many studies have been introduced legitimately, for reasons that were very strong, but which were temporary, and then have remained like ghosts haunting our schools long after their living necessity had died away. It is always hard to get any study out of our schools when it is once in. Each teacher learning it as a boy is naturally ready to teach it as a man. As John Locke says, "It is no wonder if those who make the fashion suit it to what they have and not to what their pupils want." Here surely is the key to a great deal of the conservatism and traditionalism of our teaching; and the surest way to break it down and to get rid of it would be such a wise study of the history of education, by those who are to teach, as should show them how the studies which they find in school came there, and so help them to judge whether those studies are to be dropped as temporary necessities which have been outgrown, or to be kept forever because they are forever useful.—From an Essay by Phillips Brooks.

The Pomeroy Cyclone

The horrible carnage of the Pomeroy cyclone is shocking to contemplate, but there are some incidents connected with it, both marvelous and ridiculous. One house and a family of seven were all destroyed but two children, and in the ruins of the house was found a little two years old boy, laughing and shouting and clapping his hands, while the dead family lay mangled about him.

A family sitting on a veranda saw a cow 50 yards away, coming with terrific force and striking and going right through the house destroying it and all the furniture, but the veranda and family were saved.

The most ridiculous incident was that of a rooster that was found alive, with every feather stripped off of him, not even a pin feather being left. He strutted around and crowed as though he was still the lord of the manor.

To Settle the Title.

An alley lying west of the Ann Arbor Gas Company's plant and extending from Depot to Summit streets, is now the subject of litigation between the city and the Gas Co., an amicable suit having been started to test the title to the land. The strip sixteen feet wide, was platted many years ago as an alley and has since been used when necessary for public purposes. The Gas Co. makes the claim that their deeds cover this land and that it is a private alley instead of a public one. Recently they piled a lot of old pipe across it, rendering it impassable for teams. The neighbors notified the Board of Public Works of what had been done and Street Commissioner Sutherland swore out a warrant against the superintendent of the company, H. W. Douglass, charging him with violating the ordinance which prohibits the obstructing of streets and highways. The warrant was served Monday and the case set for trial before Justice Pond, on Friday, Mr. Douglass giving his personal recognizance to be on hand at that time.

Little Sister.

"Little sister," kind and true,
With your hands as willing as
Those that any lover has,
Tell me if you love me? Do you,
If a brother's love for you
Is as strong and deep and sweet,
As high, as broad, as all-complete
As that of Jack, or Ben, or Harry,
Or any who intend to marry?

"Little sister," coy and shy,
Waiting for the one to come
Who shall turn earth into sky,
And make your senses utterly dumb
To the wishes of another,
One who sees that every day
Shall be happy in its stay,
Is not more to you than Harry
Or any who desire to marry?

"Little sister," grand, petite,
With your heart as honest as
That which my lover has,
Say me, won't you, can't you, sweet,
That a brother's love complete
In its loyalty and kindness
And its love-shut eyes of blindness,
Is not more to mine who tarry
For another's is a brother, and I am
Harry.

SHOOTING AN ALLIGATOR.

Vengeance on the Thief Who Stole the Bullock.

One day after dinner, says a traveler in Queensland, who has recorded his experiences under the title: "Missing Friends," we found that an alligator had taken away one of the working bullocks, which was lying down a few hundred yards from the house. The tracks showed plainly that the animal must have taken its victim by the hind-quarters and dragged it along, for the earth was plowed up where the bullock had been holding back with its head and forelegs.

It had been dragged to the river's edge and there killed and partly eaten. As we approached the bank we saw the alligator by the carcass, still feeding, but it dropped into the water like a stone at sight of us.

My employer, Mr. A., turned to me with sparkling eyes. "Now is our chance," he cried. "To-night and to-morrow night it will come again and eat of the bullock. Then we can shoot it."

The next evening we sought the spot as soon as darkness began to fall. The river bank nearest the water was very steep for about thirty yards; then there was a gentle slope for another twenty yards, and on that slope the carcass of the bullock was now lying.

We were careful to have the wind against us, as the alligator is shy, and would never ascend the bank if it should smell us.

We lay down flat on the ground behind the bushes, and it was agreed that I was not on any account to fire until Mr. A. should give me the signal by means of a touch. Then I was to fire into the mouth of the alligator, while he at the same moment tried to send a ball through its eye.

We lay in this position until midnight, and then came a heavy body creeping up the hill, distinctly audible, though out of sight. Now and then the noise would cease for a minute or two, then it would come on again, and at last we saw the dark mass of the alligator come crawling up to the bullock and begin tearing at it.

I dared not move sufficiently to look at Mr. A., but I nervously awaited the signal to fire. The alligator turned this way and that; at one moment it almost seemed as if its powerful tail might sweep us away.

At length we heard another alligator crawling up the bank, and the first one began snapping its jaws ferociously.

Then came the signal. Bang! went the rifles. The beast did not move a muscle. It was quite dead, and we could hear the other one tearing and rolling down into the water again.

A Great Record.

The Price Baking Powder Company, of Chicago, which is known throughout the country for the superior excellence of its Baking Powder, met with a serious loss on the morning of May 18th, in the nearly total destruction by fire of its factory and offices. No sooner had the flames been subdued than the work of restoration commenced, and the Company by prudent foresight, having had stored in outside warehouses duplicate machinery, labels and supplies of raw materials in preparation for any emergency, was enabled by energetic management to resume manufacturing within a very few days after the fire, thereby causing its customers but a trifling delay in the filling of its orders. Had the Company not been so prepared the delay would have been very serious since it would have required months of time to get new machinery.

It is now forty years since the goods manufactured by this company were first placed on the market, to Dr. Price being due the distinction of having prepared the first can of Cream of Tartar Baking Powder ever manufactured in any country. It was a great discovery superseding as it did, the old method of using cream of tartar and soda separately, to say nothing of saleratus, with which the biscuit of early days was embittered.

The Price Company has no connection with any other baking powder company or manufacturer, notwithstanding representations to the contrary made by other manufacturers whose sole aim is to deceive the public and borrow the good name and fame acquired by the Price Cream Baking Powder, which is known all over the world as the purest and "most perfect made."

THE BLUE RIBBON RACES

All Meetings Pale Beneath Detroit's Entry List.

Over 230 Are Named to Start for the $45,000 Which the Club Gives.—No Meeting on Record to Compare With It.

The classic race course of the Detroit Driving Club, where, long before the war, trotters, pacers, and runners fought for what in those days were munificent purses, will, on the week of July 17, be the scene of a race meeting which promises to eclipse anything in the history of the trotting turf. Weeks ago the call went forth to score up for the annual Blue Ribbon Meeting, and from the responses which poured in upon the Secretary it is evident that nobody would be so foolish as to neglect the splendid strings of harness horses that will come in the stables of the San Mateo, Pleasanton, and Palo Alto farms, beside the splendid lot piloted by the veteran Hickok. From the Rocky Mountains have come the Dubois horses, and from the intermediate states the splendid stables of George Starr, Budd Doble, Bob Stewart, D. Raybould, and V. L. Shuler. New York City contributes the tried campaigners of the Village and Jewett farms, and John A. Goldsmith and Pennsylvania sends the famed Cloverleaf trotters, and Gil Curry's fast ones.

Last year there were 108 entries. This year there are over 230, and in some classes the field will be the largest which have ever faced the starter. Even the successes of Independence and Terre Haute pale beneath the flattering record of the year's Detroit races, and next week will find the City of the Straits the rendezvous for all who admire the harness horse. The opening will be between the 2-year-olds, followed by the 3-year-olds race, with fifteen and ten entries respectively. The 4-year-olds will be the largest, with twenty-five entries, and then the 5-year-olds, with eighteen entries. The best of it is that all this is given the people for nothing, admission being charged only for the first or Blue Ribbon Day, July 17. Tuesday finds a card beyond criticism. First come the 4-year-olds, the fastest of the breed, and then the 3-year-olds, with special race for the 224 class, guaranteed value $10,000. For this seventeen entries are named, and there is every indication that all will start. The closing race of the day is the 2:21 pace, with twenty-three entries, and prospects of wholesale record-breaking.

Wednesday begins with a race which will last all the afternoon, the 2:22 trot. The 2:23 pace, with twenty-three entries, of them likely ones. It will be followed by the 2:15 pace, with fifteen entries, and then comes the great trotting free-for-all, this are those turf stars, Martha Wilkes, Mark Sirius, Little Albert, Walter E., both Nightingales, Lord Clinton, Alvin—by odds the best free-for-all field in history.

There will be two class races and a novelty on Thursday. The 2:15 trot and 2:18 pace have more entries than ever before, and will be followed by the 2:20 novelty trot, purse $5,000; this will be one of the features, the entries being of the best. Friday starts with an enormous field in the 2:15 trot, and after it comes the free-for-all pace. The entries include the champion, Maseo, Hal, Pol, Guy, Manager, Dallas, Flying Jib, Major Wonder, and Blue Sten—an incomparable field. The last race will be a consolation for those starting in the M. and M. race and not winning any part of the main purse.

The efforts on the part of the Club which have been so liberally recognized by the horsemen will in turn meet with favorable response from the people there is little doubt, and the closing Blue Ribbon Meeting will eclipse anything now in the books, both as regards extreme speed and attendance.
