AFTER THE BURIAL. BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Fullen with Autumn's fall leaf past, Ere yet his Summer's noon was past, Our friend, our guide, our trusted child, What woe can match woe so vain?

And whose the chartered claim to speak The sacred grief which all have part, When sorrow saddens every cheek And broods in every aching heart?

Yet Nature prompts the burning phrase That thrills the breast and shrouds the hall, The low lament of the sorrowing praise, The silent tear that love lets fall.

In loftiest rhyme, in lowliest rhyme, Shall strive to unblame the minstrel choir— The singers of the new born time, And trembling age with outworn lyre.

No room for pride, no place for blame— We fling our blossoms on the grave Pale, scentless, faded,—all we claim, This only—what we had we gave.

Oh, happy land whose peaceful choice— Fullen with a breath's simple throng— Has made its path for once his own, Has made its path for once his own.

No angry passion shakes the State— Whose woe's not ours, whose grief is not— And who could fear that sorrowing fate? Would strike at that angelic breast?

He stands, unconscious of his doom,— In many a quiet, earnest scene— Around him Summer spreads her bloom; He falls—what horror clothes the scene.

How swift the sudden flash of woe! Where all was bright as childhood's dream! He had the lightning's arrowy gleam.

Full eyes, was gathered smoothly back into a knot behind. Her forehead was low, broad, and picturesque; but there beauty ended. Her nose was irregular, her mouth large, though kind and decided, and her cheeks high and prominent. When she smiled, however, her white teeth shone, and a new and charming look overspread her whole face.

The storm raged on but Phil and Fran had built a blazing fire, and had heated water in the bright new teakettle with a view to a social cup of tea before they should go to bed.

While they were drinking it, a man knocked at the door. 'There's a bad surf, Phil,' he said, 'an' there's boats in the offin', bad driv'.

'I was bound I'd do my best,' said Fran modestly, 'and then—' with a pang—'then she's young, Philly. Young people can bear a good deal.'

'The next day the girl, though weak and feverish, was conscious and able to take food. She asked how she came there, and Fran explained something of it briefly.

'Oh, yes,' she said with a shudder; 'the boat broke up. Oh, it was awful!'

'Don't think of it,' said Fran, soothingly, 'her white forehead tenderly. You are safe now; and I've the sense to know that you shouldn't talk. And she sat beside her, soothing and comforting the tired young thing, till she went off into another quiet sleep.

'The rays from the great light-house made the darkness gray around her, but though she could hear the sound of voices in the occasional pauses between the gulls, she could see nothing. Accustomed as she was to storms, however, she could readily supply the scene hidden beneath the pall of fog. She could see the bending masts of the schooners and the pitching of the dismantled steamship. She could hear in imagination the wails for help, and could see the life-boat pulling off to the relief of the sufferers.

'In an hour she strained eyes and nose to see and hear something beyond the baffling mist and the deafening fog-horn and the gathering and bursting of the mighty waves. She felt as though there was work to do; she wanted to do it, and though she was drenched through, she determined to feel her way down the cliff. There, at least, she could see the great waves.'

'She isn't,' said Fran, laughing a trifle uncomfortably. 'She's only a poor girl that I lugged up the gully myself, and I'd gone down the cliff to see if I couldn't find something of you. The tide brought her in, and I lugged her up.'

Phil, however, did not seem to think of Fran, of her peril or of her heroism. His gaze was still fixed upon the fair face on the pillow with rapt admiration.

'Fran wished vaguely that he wouldn't look any more. Somehow her hold of him seemed to slip. "Philly" she cried, at last.

'Oh, Fran!' he said, turning toward her; 'she's as pretty as an angel, isn't she?'

'Yes,' said Fran, a sudden faintness coming over her. 'I am very tired, Philly.'

'Then he remembered what she had been through. "You shouldn't go down in the dark to the shore, Fran," he said tenderly. "The shore's different here from what it was over by the old shanty. The waves don't come in like, eh, eh, eh."

'But if I hadn't,' said Fran, stroking the damp, tightly-curling hair from his forehead, 'if I hadn't I shouldn't have saved the girl.'

'Sure enough,' said Phil fondly. 'It's a brave one you are, Fran. "Tian" many women can save a life like that. An' who'd a thought of working over her after she'd had such a tussle with the breakers!'

'I was bound I'd do my best,' said Fran modestly, 'and then—' with a pang—'then she's young, Philly. Young people can bear a good deal.'

'He? Who?' But 'Nora' Harney lifted her hand, for just then Phil broke in upon them.

'The young girl looked more beautiful than ever in Fran's neat, plain wrapper, her blue eyes bright and her cheeks pink with returning health, and her long light-brown hair wound neatly about her small head.

'Thank you,' said the girl wistfully. 'I shall be well soon. I don't know what I shall do when I'm well. I had a little money saved up, but now I haven't any money, and I've no home.'

'You saved my life,' said the girl, her beautiful eyes glowing liquid with feeling; 'I want to do something for you, but I've lost all my clothes on the steamer. I suppose you don't need me to work for you?'

'No,' said Fran doubtfully. 'I can do all my work alone, and more. I help them at the hotel sometimes. Maybe you could do something for the hotel folks.'

'That's it,' said the girl in a pleased way. 'I'll go up there to-morrow. I shall be strong enough. Then she arose and left the room with a certain lady-like grace which Fran felt powerfully and which struck Phil dumb.

'The woman's face turned a vivid rose, but she was still looking at the doorway through which the girl had vanished, and did not seem to notice it. Then the red died down, but there was a weary look left in her beautiful eyes.

'The next morning Fran prepared a simple breakfast and took it in to her patient. The girl had slept soundly all night for the first time since her rescue, and she was up and dimpled and bright. Fran set her little tray down a trifle nervously and said, "You didn't tell me all your story. Philly's gone. Who was it?'

'Oh, yes,' the girl flushed slowly, and went on finishing the braid of her long light hair. 'Nothing, only I lived with these people from the time I was a little girl. They were very good to me. There was a man who used to come there, and he took me to ride, and I twice he took me to the theatre, and I thought it was fine, for he was a grand gentleman, till I found he had a wife and big house on a grand avenue. I had thought it was strange, too, that he wouldn't let me tell my mistress that I went with him, and that he always went with me at the corner. When I found out, I was very angry. I've been brought up well; I have indeed, protested Nora Harney gently. "I told him to leave, but he said I must go with him, and one day he followed me and teased me and threatened me, and I didn't dare tell anybody, and I was afraid to go out anywhere, and I couldn't stand it. I cried all night, and one night I went to the window, and I took my ticket, and took just a few things in bundles, and ran away. I thought in a new city I'd get a place and never see him nor be afraid of him again. Oh, I hate him so! The girl stamped her foot and sobbed passionately.

'She was a happy, bird-like thing, and looked at Fran and talked with her as though the most perfect creature was a being of superior order. With Phil she would romp and play, racing with him through the gully, and even into the surf. It did not seem to occur to her that Fran—sober, elderly Fran—could ever feel disturbed at the fondness she undeniably felt for Phil, and Phil's ardent devotion to her; but Fran, dry as the fresh sea breezes brought a brighter color to her cheeks, deepened the blue of her liquid eyes, and rounded the curves of her light and exquisite figure. Fran did not wonder that the bad man had coveted her. She did not wonder, in the heavy, weary moments when the jealous pain at her heart seemed about to break it, that Phil would rather walk with herself to Nora than sit quietly with herself in the door-stone or out on the headland.

'How can you be so contented here with us?' said Fran to her kindly one day.

'Oh, I love you and Philly—and I'm afraid when I get far away from you, I shall miss you so much.'

'But don't you want to see some of your friends?'

'No; I don't want to see the people I used to live with, for he would find me, and they would take me to the asylum, you know; so I've no relatives. No, I love you and Philly better than anybody else.'

'But if you were in the city you could have companions of your own age, and go to parties,' urged Fran.

'But Philly is about my age—and you,' the girl added quickly.

'Fran would not notice it. "You'll want to be married by and by," she said, and there's nobody fine enough for you here.'

'Why should I want to get married?' laughed Nora. 'I've got you and Philly, and I can make enough here to pay you something and buy my clothes.' This was true. Nora was always ready to work, and the ladies in Brimmertown had heard of her skill and often brought her sewing and embroidery to do, while from the hotel and the shore village she received the pay for an honest day's work. Her money she almost always gave to Fran. 'It's yours, she would say earnestly, when in her own demonstrative fashion. "I'm your girl, you know, Fran."

'Every day when Phil came in, strong with the smell of fish and of the sea, he would kiss Fran, who was always ready to work, and the ladies in Brimmertown had heard of her skill and often brought her sewing and embroidery to do, while from the hotel and the shore village she received the pay for an honest day's work. Her money she almost always gave to Fran. 'It's yours, she would say earnestly, when in her own demonstrative fashion. "I'm your girl, you know, Fran."

'I'll mend it,' shouted Nora, springing to meet him. She stumbled, and he caught her, and they came up together, his arm around her, and her face looking up into his, laughing and merry.

'Fran watched them from within, breathlessly, and as Phil entered he caught the almost stern look in her eye. His arm dropped, and a dogged, red look came over his face. Then he approached her slowly and kissed her, and it seemed to Fran that her life and love had been in his kisses.

'The next day she arose as usual, and when her morning work was done she went out on the cliff. Phil had gone over to Brimmertown with one of his mates, and the "Frances Darrow," his sail-boat, lay at anchor down beside the pier with a dozen other fishing-boats. There was no sea yet, and there was an Indian-summer in the air. Nora had gone up to the hotel to do a day's work. Fran was alone.

'As she sat on the cliff she talked aloud with herself—something which was not habitual to her, and which seemed quite at variance with her character. "I think I am a little crazy," she said dreamily, "but somehow I can't understand it. I can't stand in the way of their happiness." A moment later she added, "I saved her; yes, and I'd save her again. She's so innocent and pretty; I've nothing against her. Oh, no! I'd save her; but I didn't save her for this,—no, not for this!"

'There were some ships in the distance. "I think," said Fran, "I think that when those sails go out of sight, I shall see the boat that I saved. I'll steer for a buoy and tie the boat. Philly'll wait for it, for it's a good boat. He said he wouldn't have named it the "Frances Darrow" if it hadn't been a good boat.'

'The ships glided slowly out of sight, Fran strained her eyes, but she could not follow them any longer. Then she went into the house and wrote on a little piece of paper— "Good-by, Philly, I love you. That's why I go away. I think I am a little crazy, but I love you. I am dead, Philly, so don't look for me. The boat is fastened to the harbor-buoy. Good-by, Nora. Do not leave Philly. Your loving FRAN."

'The shore was very still when Fran hoisted quietly the sail of the "Frances Darrow," and made for the buoy at the mouth of the little harbor. There she fastened the boat. "That night Phil came home, read the little note, turned pale as death, and started with all haste for the buoy and the boat. But when he drew up alongside of it, it was empty.

'A Harmless Temperance Beverage.' Yes, I have finally come to the conclusion that lager beer is a harmless temperance beverage, and at least is not intoxicating. In proof of this I have been told by a German who said he drank it all his life, just as he did the experiment, and was after all obliged to go to bed entirely sober in the morning. I have seen this same man drink eighteen and twenty glasses, and as if he was drunk it was in German, and nobody could understand it.

Scientific Notes.

A solution of blue vitriol is used to preserve timber from dry rot. A copper wire one-tenth inch thick can support three hundred pounds weight. To fit a key: Smoke the blank over a candle. Insert it into the keyhole and press it hard against the wards of the lock. The indentations in the smoked portions will show where to file.

The owners of all buildings on which lightning rods have stood many years should occasionally examine them, to see that the earth terminals have not become unsafe by rusting away. Hold a cold chisel firmly to its cut without removing it at every blow. This will increase the effectiveness of the tool, and there will be less danger of breaking by a foul blow.

In order to hear distinctly an echo of one syllable the operator must be sixty feet from the surface which reflects the sound. For echo of more than one the distance must be over one hundred feet. Lightning struck a calf at Newport, Me., that was covered with white and black spots. Every white spot was smuged, even to the taking off of the skin, while not a hair of the black spots was injured.

Never allow an embankment of earth subject to freezing to press against a basement wall, the successive thrusts to the front corner or later, throwing it over. A vertical stratum of coarse gravel or small stone should be interposed. In the opinion of M. H. Toussaint no contagious malarial has a greater virulence than tuberculosis. The virus preserves its efficacy at temperatures which completely destroy the bacteria which cause fever; destruction takes place as easily by indigestion as by inoculation.

It is sometimes necessary to bore one or more holes in porcelain, but the usual way of doing this is not easy. If, however, an ordinary drill is hardened and kept moist with oil of turpentine it will easily penetrate the porcelain. The drill commonly employed in connection with scroll-cutting machines answers very well. Prof. Hutchison has, in one of his lectures, mentioned a very interesting fact ascertained in Berlin. Among Roman Catholics, who prohibit marriages between persons who are near blood relatives, the proportion of deaf-mutes is 1 in 3,000; among Protestants, who view such marriages as permissible, the proportion is 1 in 2,000; while among Jews, who encourage intermarriage with blood relations, the deaf-mutes are as 1 in 400.

For SLEEPLESSNESS.—Wet half a towel, apply it to the back of the head, and press it upward toward the base of the brain, and fasten the dry half over so as to prevent the too rapid exhalation. The effect is prompt and charming, cooling the brain and inducing calmer, sweeter sleep than any narcotic. Warm water may be used, though most persons prefer cold. To those who suffer from over-exertion of the brain, whether the result of brain work or pressing anxiety, this simple remedy has proved an especial boon.

Every boiler should be protected from the weather. It often occurs that boilers have no other protection than simply a loose board roof, which in ordinary rain storms leaks at every point. If the boilers were always under shelter, the bad consequences would be comparatively light, but the great mischief occurs when the boilers are cold. Whenever rust appears on the surface of a boiler it means loss of iron and strength, and consequently is less able to withstand high pressure. A novel pair of scissors has been devised by Herr Sievert of Dresden. The blades are represented by two circular steel knives, which slightly overlap, and are fastened to a pair of wooden rollers with India rubber rims, which grip and guide the cloth as it passes between the knives, so that the latter may cut straight. These cutters are carried by two handles, or levers, which are held in position by a spring, and are actuated by pushing the scissors forward, so as to cause the rollers to revolve.

Large iron ore deposits of almost unprecedented richness have lately been surveyed in Lapland by practical mining engineers. The district is near the village of Jokasjärvi, in Swedish Lapland, about 100 miles from one of the arms of the West. The analysis shows that the ore is of the best quality, and the quantity is said to be sufficient to supply the entire world with iron, at the present rate of consumption, for many years. It is intended to construct a railway from Fagerman to the mine; and it is stated that the attention of English and Dutch capitalists has already been directed to this ore, and the ore is one of the Swedish iron fields.

The Journal of Science says that in order to account for the mysterious disappearances of persons, now so common, a French writer suggests the existence of a disease not yet recognized, which, without any previous warning, suddenly resolves the patient into vapor. He even professes to have witnessed the disappearance of a friend who was taken to bed, and the next simple consideration overturns this hypothesis. We can scarcely assume that the disease causes the sudden vaporization of clothing, boots, knives, money, trinkets, and all that the patient had about him at the time of his disappearance. Yet no one has ever found in the street a complete suit of clothes from which the body of the wearer escaped. A cheap and useful disinfectant is a solution of chloride of lead. It is powerful, effective, and its cost very small. It may be prepared as follows: Take half a drachm of nitrate of lead and dissolve in a pint or more boiling water. Dissolve two drachms of common salt in a pint or bucket of water, pour the two solutions together, and allow to settle. The clear liquid is the disinfectant. The clear supernatant fluid will be a saturated solution of chloride of lead. A cloth dipped in a solution of chloride of lead and hung up in a room will sweeten a fetid atmosphere instantaneously, or a solution thrown down a sink, water-closet, or drain, or over a heap of refuse, will produce a like result.

ANN ARBOR DEMOCRAT

JOHN L. BURLING, Editor.

THURSDAY MORNING, October 18, 1881.

Entered as Second Class Matter in the Post Office at Ann Arbor, Mich.

Prof. Franklin Resigns the Deanship.

Prof. E. C. Franklin presented the following communication to the faculty of the homeopathic college Friday:

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN, ANN ARBOR, Mich., October 6, 1881.

GENTLEMEN—I herewith resign my position as dean of this college, to take place this day, October 6, 1881.

I am led to this step, first, on account of desire long since entertained, as you know, to surrender the office on account of the labor and the time occupied in properly performing its duties, and the inadequate pay attached thereto.

The extra literary labors that I have assumed the present year and thereafter will occupy all the time not required in my lectures and other duties in the college, and at hospital.

I also think in the present state of feeling between the two medical schools it is right and proper that the administration of our college affairs should be placed in other hands. Thanking you, gentlemen, for the uniform assistance you have always given me in the administration of the affairs of the college, for the friendly interest you have manifested in all things pertaining to its success and prosperity, and for the peace and harmony that has marked its affairs since I have had the management of it, I beg to bid you adieu.

I remain, very truly yours, E. C. FRANKLIN.

Fair Notes.

More rain Friday.

The receipts at the gate Thursday were over $1,000.

Miss Fletcher was the principal exhibitor of canned fruits.

The crowd present Thursday was estimated as high as 600.

Prof. Hogan made two very satisfactory balloon ascensions Thursday.

Over 500 persons took their meals at Kearney's restaurant Thursday.

It was a sensible move to vote to have the fair a year hence a week earlier.

In the race Thursday Topsey took first money and Black George was second.

Not a clothing house was represented, and only one dry goods establishment.

To Miss A. Wilsey, for best three loaves yeast bread, $1 by the same firm.

To C. Walker & Bros., English decorated ten set of 56 pieces, valued at $67.75, by DeWitt, for best top carriage decorated in Ann Arbor.

Rev. Dr. Ryder and Miss Ada Tripp was married yesterday.

Prof. Wilson has been elected dean of the homeopathic faculty.

Poster, republican, is elected governor of Ohio by 10,000 majority.

The feeling is so great against the present incompetent recording secretary of the agricultural society, that he will not be burdened with the office another year. The Register showed him up yesterday, all of which this Democrat endorses.

Under an act of the last legislature the judge of probate was instructed to require bonds of the county treasurer, in such amount as he may see fit, for money deposited in his possession, belonging to deceased persons who have no heirs residing in this county.

Current Wit.

What is vinegar without mother? It is orphan very poor.

What is a man's hands in his pockets will never hold his own with the world.

No lady with refinement will use her husband's meerschaum pipe to drive nails in the wall.

LADY BEAUTIFIERS—Ladies you cannot make fair skin, rosy cheeks, and sparkling eyes with all the cosmetics of France, or beautifiers of the world, while in poor health, and nothing will give you such rich blood, good health, strength and beauty as Hop Bitters. A trial is a certain proof.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Is it disordered liver giving you a yellow skin or costive bowels, which have resulted in distressing piles, or do your kidneys refuse to perform their functions? If so, your system will soon be clogged with poisons. Take a few doses of Kidney-Wort and you'll feel like a new man. Nature will throw off every impediment and each organ will be ready for duty. Druggists sell both the dry and liquid.—Evanston's Tribune.

Bucklin's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Blisters, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all kinds of skin eruptions. It cures itching humors, and gives perfect satisfaction in every case, or the money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Eberbach & Son, Ann Arbor, Mich.

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any drug store as is now at Eberbach & Son's for a trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs, and croup. All persons afflicted with asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, severe coughs, or any affection of the throat and lungs, can get a trial bottle of this great remedy, free, by calling at above drug store.

TRUE TO HER TRUST.

Too much cannot be said of the ever-faithful wife and mother, constantly watching and caring for her dear ones, never neglecting a single duty in their behalf. When they are assailed by disease, and the system should have a thorough cleansing, the stomach and bowels regulated, blood purified, malarial poison exterminated, she must know that Electric Bitters are the only sure remedy. They are the best and purest medicine in the world, and only cost fifty cents. Sold by Eberbach & Son.

Dr. Baxter's Mandrake Bitters are a superior combination of barks, roots, and herbs not attained by any other manufacturers of bitters.

Keep in the stable and always at hand Henry & Johnson's Arnica and Oil Liniment, as it is the best remedy for hurts, bruises, sprains, etc.

The Lansing Republican says of the Gosche-Hopper Co., in their rendition of "100 Wives": Each character is a study. Hopper, as McGinley foreman, admires her fidelity to nature, but the applause given to Miss Gardner is a spontaneous offering to as pretty and piquant a little actress as now trends the American stage, whether Sophronie McGinley "or any other woman." Miss Elbridge as Elsie Bradford is natural and pleasing. Budworth as Hung Li is China all through, and little Vivva Ogden, as Bessie, evinced the sympathy of the house at once. It is a good company and a good play.

The Eastern Michigan agricultural and horticultural society elected the following officers: President, J. R. Some weeks ago it will be remembered that a deaf and dumb man named Geo. Rhoades, lost his eyesight by wiping his eyes on a rag thrown from the university hospital. As Rhoades is a poor man and was obliged to work for his living, Jas. Appleyard, in whose employ he was when he met with the misfortune, has started a subscription paper and signed $25. He is in hopes to realize a nice little sum for the blind man. Here is an opportunity for the charitable to show their benevolence. Just think of it, here is a man now deaf, dumb and blind, and to his commiseration his relatives as well as himself haven't a dollar in the world. A nice little sum would be realized.

Total, $31,443.56.

Heretofore the secretaries of the Washtenaw county agricultural and horticultural society have been obliging and accommodating gentlemen. They were always disposed, for it was their duty to render every assistance in their power to reporters and newspaper men generally, by permitting them to examine the books and papers of the society to make out their reports for publication, that the people of the county might know the result of fair matters. We repeat that in every instance except one, since we have had anything to do with newspaper work, the secretaries of the society have been gentlemen. But the self-conceited ignoramus who has occupied the position for nearly a year had the audacity to deny a simple request to look at the books of the society. Fools cannot be held responsible for their actions, and perhaps we should thank the gods for the clarity of our John N. Pallely. Not only did he refuse us this privilege, but other reporters were similarly treated. The officers of the society condemn his course, and think he has shown himself to be what many citizens have long known, virtually non compos mentis.

Two weeks ago last Saturday John Duffy of New York, came here to visit his brothers, Edward and Michael Duffy. He attended the fair at Ypsilanti and took a severe cold and was taken down with pneumonia. He continued to grow worse and died Friday night at 5 o'clock. His wife, who was in New York, was telegraphed for but did not arrive at the residence of Michael Duffy, where her husband was resting until after his death. Mr. Duffy was a very prominent and influential citizen of New York, and was very wealthy. During the war he was provost marshal of New York city, and afterwards a candidate for congress. It was during the administration of President Pierce that he was appointed United States minister to Galway, Ireland. At the breaking out of the rebellion he was captain of Company F, 69th regiment (New York) and when President Lincoln called for volunteers, Mr. Duffy girded on his armor and went to the front with his regiment, where he remained until it was ordered home. As a war democrat he took a deep interest in the cause of the union. His funeral was held Tuesday, and was the largest ever seen in Northfield. Rev. Dr. Reilley, of Detroit, assisted by three priests officiated. Fr. Riley preached the funeral sermon and paid a high tribute to the deceased. His remains were deposited in the Catholic cemetery at Northfield.

Council Meeting. At a special meeting of the council Monday evening the following was adopted:

WHEREAS, in view of the public safety, the council of the city of Ann Arbor, Michigan, has caused the construction of two bridges, known as bridges Nos. 1 and 2, across the Huron river in said city, and have made other repairs in order that public travel in the said city might be safe and convenient. And

WHEREAS, The means now provided by law are not sufficient to enable the said city to keep its public streets, bridges, ferries and wharves in good repair during the current year. And

WHEREAS, There will be required for such purpose over and above the $2,000 provided by the charter, an additional sum of $8,000. Now therefore

Resolved, That in accordance with section 4, of article No. 24, of the session laws of the state of Michigan, of 1879, such additional sum of $8,000 be raised by general tax upon the taxable real property of the city at large, according to law, and that such sum be demagogued, "additional street fund."

RESOLUTIONS. On motion of recorder Douglas, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the following sums, for the following purposes, respectively, be levied and collected by tax the current year, upon the city at large, according to law, viz: For 5th coupon interest, from Feb. 1, 1881, to Feb. 1, 1882, court house aid bonds, $1,022; fourth installment court house aid bonds, $2,000; general purposes, $6,000; general street fund, $2,000; general purposes additional street fund, $8,000. And that the following sums be levied and collected by tax in the following wards respectively, the current year, viz: First ward, $1,000; second ward, $700; third, $1,000; fourth, $800; fifth, $300; sixth, $1,000.

The mayor and recorder were directed to certify the same to the proper supervisors, to the end that the same may be included in the proper tax rolls.

On motion of Ald. Luick, chairman of the sidewalk committee, sidewalks were ordered constructed as follows:

On the east side of Fourth street in front of the premises owned by Escalla Green, extending from the premises owned by F. R. Arkey, Detroit street, in front of the premises of Henry Binder, 122 feet in length on Liberty street, and a sidewalk 12 feet wide and 35 feet long on Main street, east side in front of the same premises. Along the front of premises owned by Wm. Extinger, Pages addition; in front of the premises of Michael Clancy on Detroit street.

The following ordinance was also adopted: Ordinance Relative to Transient Dealers

Section 1. No person shall follow the business or occupation of soliciting orders for or selling goods, wares and merchandise from samples on any street or public place within the limits of the city of Ann Arbor without a license from the recorder.

Section 2. The recorder is hereby authorized to issue a license to any person to follow the business of soliciting orders for and selling goods, wares and merchandise from samples on any street or public place within the limits of the city of Ann Arbor for the sum of $100.

Section 3. Any person soliciting a license under this ordinance shall pay therefor as follows: Twenty-five dollars for each and every day he shall be engaged in the said business of soliciting orders for or selling goods, wares and merchandise from samples.

Section 4. Provided that this ordinance is not intended to apply to sales by sample to merchants and regular dealers within the city.

Section 5. Any violator of the provisions of this ordinance shall be fined by a justice of the peace not less than ten dollars nor exceeding fifty dollars, or be imprisoned in the city jail for a term not exceeding ninety days.

JOHN KAPPE, Mayor. W. W. DONAGAN, Recorder.
