THE FARM.

A SUCCESSFUL STRIKER.

"Ho, I'm a jolly striker bold,
No Factory Prince can me oppress;
I strike as the workmen struck of old,
For a kumble home in the wilderness,
Although my strike to-day is small,
A side of pork and a sack of meal,
Two willing arms, and that's not all;
I've four good pounds of bright sharp steel

And an eighty-acre plot of loam,
Where tightly grows the forest tree,
And here each day from sun till sun,
My ax beats Freedom's reveille.
'Tis a joily strike; for a precious prize,
Though not for glory nor for fame
Istrike for a realm about the size
Of a happy home for Eliza Jane.

She told me one short year ago:
"John, get a home before we wed;
As the old time lovers used to do."
Since then mores weat than tears I've shed.
And so I strike like an honest man,
Striking down the foe with ease;
Striking on the good old business plan,—
Striking down the forest trees.

Strike, strike from morn till night,
The sharp, bright steel rings loud and clear:
Striking is my soul's delight,
Striking like the old pioneer.
And thus he strikes from day to day,
Though humble now, with highest aim,
Striking in the good old righteous way,
For love and home, and Eliza Jane.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

FOR LOVE'S SAKE.

Sometimes I am tempted to murmur That life is flitting away,
With only a round of trifles
Filling each busy day,

Dusting nooks and corners,
Making the house look fair,
And patiently taking on me
The burden of woman's care.

Comforting childish sorrows,
And charming the childish heart,
With the simple song and story,
Told with a mother's art:
Setting the dear home table,
And clearing the meal away,
And going on little errands
In the twilight of the day.

Sewing and piecing well Little jackets and trousers, So nearly that none can tell Where are the seams and joinings—

Ah! the seamy side of life
Is kept out of sight by the magic
Of many a mother and wife! And off, when I'm ready to murmur That time is flitting away, With the self-same round of duties

Filling each busy day,
It comes to my spirit sweetly,
With the grace of a thought divine,
"You are living, tolling for love's sake,
And the loving should never repine. "You are guiding the little footsteps

In the way they ought to walk,
You are dropping a word for Jesus
In the midst of your household talk;
Living your life for love's sake,
Till the homely cares grow sweet—
And sacred the self-denial
That is laid at the Wester's feet?"

That is laid at the Master's feet."

Lambrequins and Curtains.

When house-cleaning is at an end, and everything set in order, the housewife, (particularly if she is young and enthusiastic and her home yet somewhat bare,) begins to cast about in her mind to see what she can add that shall beautify.

Perhaps among the lesser belongings of a room there is nothing which adds more to its beauty than tasteful and pretty window drapery; and in the matter of curtains and lambrequins one can scarcely fail to please one-self among the many graceful and unique designs. Many of these, however, have more money in them than the prudent housewife cares to put into her windows while others searcely less hand dows, while others, scarcely less handsome, she can herself construct at a comparatively trifling expense. Even the cost of the higher-priced may be considerably lessened by buying material and cutting and making at home. The designer must bear in mind, however, that the scolloped and ruffled and fluted lambrequins, both light and dark, that have so long held sway, are now a thing of the past, and a lambrequin perfectly straight at the bottom and top is thought to be "the only proper thing." But would it not be well to glance at the other side of the question. To protect home industries it is necessary to tax articles used by the masses of the people at as exhorbitant rates as these: Rice, 15 per cent; chloroform, 85 per cent; acetate of soda, 216 per cent; caustic, 63 per cent; strychina, 81 percent; cotton prints (valued at 14 cents per yard), 58 per cent; spool thread (that gigantic monopoly), 78 per cent; window glass, 80 per cent; plate glass, 109 per cent; boiler iron, 74 per cent; hollow If any of our protective contemporaries can give adequate reason for such rates Mr. Marshall's design is the most elabo- A. If the United States had a representation in congress upon the same basis as Austro-Hungary, there would be no less than 2,286 members of congress and senators to worry the railroads and other monopolies. The expense to such law-defying corporations would be great, and in the end would have to be paid by the public. Therefore it is probably as well for the general welfare of the country to leave the representation at a smaller number. It is more convenient and less expensive in the long run.

All our Drain Tile are made of Fire Clay, are f unusual strength and light weight, which ma-erially reduces the breakage and expense of transportation.

The ditching for this class of tiling is less expensive, as they do not require to be laid below frost but only deep enough to escape the plow.

While this is more economical it also aids obtainings better "fall" or grade to the drain.

De Long's Hard Fate.

HOW NEAR HE CAME TO RESCUE-BEA CONS BURNED NIGHTLY IN VAIN.

The place where the bodies of De-Long's party were found, which I have visited, is fifteen miles northeast of the sland of Stolboy, the prominent pillarlike rcck in the Lena, where the river branches east of Dikoff. De Long had all along imagined that Stolboy was a mythe, and supposed he had passed it ong before, and two weeks before his death he said in his note-book:-"Quite believe we are on the island of Titary and twenty-five miles from Kumak-Surka." He was bewildered by the make of rivers flowing and intermingling on the Delta proper, and in his own weak condition had put the distances accomplished longer than they really were. When he reached the bluff on which were the Doctor and Ah Sam and under the shelter which was a little way off, most of the others expired. Then he must have seen clearly that he

DeLong is constantly recording here "numerous ptarmigan tracks, but for their capture Alexia had only a rifle, and though a very few." On the day Noros and

A Bounty on Rattlesnakes.

When a man is bitten by a rattlesnake it is only natural that he should resort to heroic remedies. Mr. E. M. Worth, the gentleman who was severely wounded by one of his captive rattlesnakes a few days ago, evidently thought that strong treatment was necessary. According to the statements, he drank a pint of raw whiskey at once. Our information is that he took much more than this, in fact nearly a quart; and a quart of whiskey of itself is often enough to kill a man, without any other poison.

Whiskey, however, was undoubtedly the right thing to take under the circumstances; only not so much of it. The patient was harmed by the over-In a country like ours, where rattlesnakes and other venomous serpents are by no means uncommon, the rural boards of health would do well to diffuse accurate information as to the proper treatment of snake bite. Many lives have been lost for want of trust worthy knowledge on this subject.

We think there would also be wis dom in paying a bounty for every rattlesnake killed. The State of New York still offers liberal bounties to persons who kill wolves or panthers within the boundaries of the State. The amounts prescribed by law are thirty dollars for a grown wolf, fifteen dollars for a pup wolf, and twenty dollars for a panther. The skin and skull of the dead animal have to be produced before the Supervisor and one of the Justices of the Peace in the town where the creature is killed, and these officers are bound to burn and destroy the skull, and brand the skin so that it may be identified, and cannot be used as the means of obtaining a second bounty.

These provisions are designed for the protection chiefly of domestic animals. Neither wolves nor panthers are dangerous to man in New York. But rattlesnakes are numerous in many Surka, which a few days before he had in a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is a rattlesnake there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is danger to human and the state; and wherever there is danger to human and the state; and the state is danger to have a state is described in the state is descr

Malaria a la Mode.

"Yes, sir," remarked a congressman

I surveyed this sufferer near Barkin .- Special Cor. N. Y. Her- with great care. He came from the West. He wore a long beard, a red nose, an inflamed eye and a girth of about eighty-four inches. With the aid of an ordinary imagination you could see the red-headed duck, pate de foie gras, calves, head a la viniagrette, terapin, and champagne, all laid away in ayers under his belt. From the size of his head and the swelling in his templar veins it was evident that he had a bad case of Washington malaria on hand. That's one type of the disease.

Again, you'll find a congressman with nerves so unstrung that he can't sign a check for his board. He's a great sufferer. He has to go out about twelve times a day to see "the doctor." He hates to be alone, and the thought of anything to eat operates on him like a red rag on a bull. Then he writes home that he has been taken down with the Washington malaria.

Malaria is a peculiar complaint. It is one of those portable diseases you can carry around with you almost any where if you have enough money to buy the drinks. Several years ago, when the virulence of this complaint in Washington was first circulated all over the country by the statesman who made périodic calls at the capital, we thought it might possibly be true to some ex-tent, but it did seem rather remarkable that the people who lived here in the capacity of natives, and followed the pious and orderly customs of the place, never suffered to such an alarming extent as these transient travelers. At last it was observed, however, that statesmen who come on here without their families-not caring to expose them to the frivolities of the capitalare the first to yield to the ruinous influence of this malarious atmosphere, while those who bring their families, and run on regular schedule bed-time, are seldom troubled with the complaint. -Washington Capital.

Chicago Sentiment. "Is it not beautiful, sweetheart?"

As Lillian McGuire spoke these words she looked into Rupert Hetherington's face with her starry eyes, and, as the light of holy love shot forth from within their dusky depths, he felt instinctively that she was going to hold him up for some ice cream. But, conquering the sombre reflections that this ghastly thought called up, the young man placed his arm around Lillian's waist to prevent her red sash from being sunstruck, and waited in the tense agony of a horrible suspicion for her to speak again.

"Do you not think it is lovely, darling? "What?" asked Rupert, with an ingenuous Owl-Club expression on the perfect features of his West-Side face.

"Why, the morning, to be sure," replied the girl, a sunny, six-button smile playing lightly around her lips as if afraid it might fall in. "The twittering of the birds, those silver-throated harbingers of summer, is to be heard on every branch and bough. The air is laden with the delicate perfume of lilac ed leaves of you sturdy maple reflect a little of the crimson and gold of the rising sun. Spring has been a sad laggard, but now that she has come in all her glory of bud and blossom, what can be more beautiful?" "I cannot tell you," replied Rupert. "You are far too fly for me, dearest, when such matters are to be discussed But in the dreamy, sensuous days of autumn, when the tasseled corn hangs ripe in the sheaves, and the leaves have felt the blighting touch of the Frost King's icy breath, I am more liable to get there Mine, as you know, is a sensitive, Sedgwick street nature that shrinks from contact with a cold and cruel world. To me the spring has naught of joy. The low, mellow note of the new milch cow chasing a butcher's-wagon in which her off-spring uneasily reclines seems to me like the wail of a lost soul, and weird fancies crowd my brain as I hear at midnight the mournful hoot of the owl, flitting like some evil spirit amid the desolate precincts of the viliage churchyard." "It is your liver, darling," murmured

Lillian. "I sometimes think so," was the reply. "Ever and anon the thought comes over me like a black demon of the night that I am off my feed. But it cannot, must not be. Yet in the autumn all is changed. The soft mezzotints of the pumpkin pie fall gratefully on my eye, and all nature, laughing in the fruitage of an abundant harvest, seems joyous and free from care. It is to tell you this that I have come around so early this morning—to tell you that in the months that are to come, the scorching days of midsummer, when the sun, hanging like a ball of molten brass in the sky, will send down its rays in pitiless fury, you had better get another fellow-one who will love you dearly as I have done, and whose memory you can ever cherish with tender gentleness." "But whom shall I get?" asked the girl in agonized tones. "I have thought of this, sweetheart," Rupert replied. "You can do no better than take George W. Simpson. He loves you dearly. I know it, because he has often told me that he doesn't, and George cannot tell the truth." "I will do as you say," said the girl, choking back a sob that was welling
