NATIONAL GAMBLING.

Gambling has become a large part of American commercial life. The broad and meat we eat, the corn we feed our horses, the clothes with which we cover ourselves as well as the investments we make are all affected by the wholesale gambling that permeates every part of this nation.

Cotton speculation in the south is what wheat speculation is in the west. Fortunately, however, foreign trade in cotton is simply deferred by corners, and is not permanently lost as in the case with wheat.

Petroleum speculation is always rife in Pennsylvania and its adjacent states, the pipe line certificates acting as the efficient means of exchange.

THE OLDEN TIME. What the First Papers Published in Washtenaw County had to say on the Subject of Temperance.

It is a fact that all along through the years since this county was settled, the editorial columns of our papers have not been wanting in terse, incisive, and strong arguments in favor of temperance.

"It will be seen from the article that occupies the first place in this paper, that the temperance cause has a place in our minds."

"These words refer to an address on the first page on the subject of temperance by Rev. Mr. Williams, of Middletown, Conn., upon the question, 'Why not join a temperance society?'"

"The press everywhere speaks in the highest terms of the Swedish Lady Quartette and Miss Wright, who will give an entertainment in the opera house, March 1st."

"Roland Reed began an engagement at the People's theatre in Fred Marsden's comedy 'Cheek', before a very large and appreciative audience. Mr. Reed appeared in this comedy some time ago at a theatre on the west side, making a decisive hit, and the frequent bursts of generous applause and hearty laughter that rewarded his efforts last evening give evidence that his success on the east side will be equally as great."

Maggie Mitchell is booked for the opera house, March 4.

The "Creole" (Article 47). This piece opens in a hotel at Harve, France, at the commencement of which George Duhamel, the only son of a widowed mother, is desperately in love with Cora, a Creole, whom he has met in New Orleans. The attentions bestowed on her by a Monsieur Mazilier have so frenzied Duhamel that, in a moment of jealous rage, he shoots her and so scars her face as to disfigure her for life.

This was Mr. Jefferson's idea of a Republic. It was a conception of one of the ablest minds our country ever produced. A republic can exist only where each citizen feels himself a part of it, where he feels his responsibility as a member of the body politic, and generally as a citizen to promote their peace and prosperity, are the common property of every citizen. They are a possession far more valuable than all other property however great that may be.

THE BATTLE OF TO-DAY. "The battle of to-day is between men and money, and the real leaders of the republican party are the Skylocks; privileged and incorporated wealth is one of the two great dangers that here threaten popular institutions, and the republican party is its servant and organ."

One day last week an assistant to one of the professors in the school of pharmacy, wishing to show the action of poison on the stomach of a cat, gave the feline a dose, and after it was dead proceeded to dissect it, but imagine the surprise of the members of his class, when, instead of the stomach, the kidneys were brought forth. The remainder of the anatomy had been retained to the dead hole in the rear of the medical building. The assistant, evidently, was not posted, did not know the difference between the stomach and kidneys, and yet this ignorance occupies the position of an instructor.

As the time for the spring election approaches, candidates for the respective offices generally begin to loom up, but there seems to be very little just now to be said on the subject. The candidates with but one exception have not yet shied their castors into the ring for some cause or another, but next month the political pot will commence to bubble. The temperance men propose to run a ticket and they are conceited enough to believe they can carry the day. With three tickets in the field some talk will be done by the friends of the respective candidates whomsoever they may be.

Died, in this city February 12, 1884, George Fream. He was a brother of Mrs. C. A. Fletcher, of this city. He was born in New York city, April 24th, 1806. His father was a soldier of the war of 1812. His grandfather, John Fream, was a messenger of Gen. Washington in the war of the revolution. His grandfather on his mother's side, John Terhune, was an ensign through that war. The subject of this notice served three years in the late war. He held various offices in his township (Lodi) and also held, for a term, the office of deputy sheriff. He was a life long democrat. He leaves three children.

The New York Morning Journal says Mr. Roland Reed is the second of the attractions the People's theatre has had. As the central figure of Marsden's "Cheek" he took immensely well with a large audience. He has elaborated this creation to a point which makes it practically a new thing. When he is on the stage there is no dull moment in the piece. His amazing and natural impudence convulses the house. The supporting company have been well selected as to personnel, and there is in particular one lady who plays a designing and ventriloquist so well that it is life-like in its fidelity, and almost ranks as a well-studied portraiture with that of the star.

A HUNTER'S STORY.

How he was overcome and the way by which he was finally saved. An unusual adventure which recently occurred to your correspondent while hunting at Brookmead in this state is so timely and contains so much that can be made valuable to all readers, that I venture to reproduce it in entire.

An Incident of the War.

The wife of Governor Robie, of Maine, recently made an address at a Grange meeting, and her remarks were published with complimentary comments in a Georgian magazine. Then Governor Robie wrote to the editor, thanking him for his courtesy, and adding: "It was my fortune to be an officer in the United States army. A little incident occurred in the seven days' battle in front of Richmond, Va., which I shall never forget. I was temporarily assisting in caring for wounded prisoners, and while discharging that duty I found Colonel Lamar, of Georgia, who was severely wounded by a minie ball, which had penetrated the groin, making a fearful wound. The surgeons were discussing the necessity of amputation at the hip joint. Colonel Lamar asked me to use my influence against such a course, which I did, being myself a surgeon and physician. He asked me for a blanket, which I was very glad to find and present to him. After a little episode, circumstances required that I should go with his horse, although I have often inquired, I have never learned the fate of that brave officer. My only object in making mention of this incident is to inform you of your countryman's noble still lives." The Georgia editor referred to Colonel Lamar, member of the State Legislature, and received from him and forwarded to Governor Robie a reply, saying: "Yes! I am the Colonel Lamar to whom Governor George Rogers Taylor wounded while leading a regiment in a charge. . . . Well do I remember the kind gentleman who interposed in my behalf. I was very grateful. I need not be ashamed to tell you that I have never forgotten the noble and force of my feelings. I love him like a brother, and he shall find me one indeed if the wonder-working dispensation of Providence should ever place him in the want of a brother's arm or mind or bosom."

A Wit's Wit.

Before I conclude or forget let me tell you a few stories of Douglas Jerrold that I have heard, and which are well worth preservation. Frank Stone, a very nice fellow, is very disputatious, for a wit or two, and he is not a bit of a "Differential Calculus." One day he had a party at a supper party, a gentleman in fresh from the opera, and full of enthusiasm, especially after a certain air which had quite a vogue at the moment. In fact, says Mr. Stone, "it quite carried me away." Jerrold said, "Is there no one who can whistle it?" He once composed an epitaph for Charles Knight (by anticipation) which he declared to be the briefest on record. "Good night" (Knight) W. L. Longfellow said, "Is there no one who can whistle it?" He once composed an epitaph for Charles Knight (by anticipation) which he declared to be the briefest on record. "Good night" (Knight) W. L. Longfellow said, "Is there no one who can whistle it?"

It is indeed gratifying to notice the prompts with which citizens of cities and villages throughout the land have responded to the appeals for aid from the flooded district. All classes, rich and poor alike, have united in the work of relief. The "widows' and 'orphan's' being given as cheerfully, and received as gratefully as the rich man's thousands. The suffering and destitution of the unfortunates have appealed to the great heart of the people, and in the work of relieving the distressed, all can personally testify to the scriptural truth that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

HER DESPISED ACCOMPLISHMENT.

Old Mr. Brown stood in his private office with his back to the fire and his coat-tails balanced in either hand. He was a bald-headed old gentleman with a ruddy complexion, keen black eyes, and legs-of-mutton whiskers which were white as snow. And Miss Nell, his young niece, stood in the doorway, looking at him from the depths of the big armchair in which he had beckoned her to seat herself. "So you are my cousin Adrian's daughter?" said he after a long pause. "Yes," said Nell, wondering what was in all those mysterious tin boxes, and whether the monster iron safe was full of gold and silver pieces. "And you want something to do?" "Yes, please!" "Humph!" said Mr. Brown. "Nelly, I should like to see you in my office. I have a few things for you to do. I am not asking for charity. I am willing to work for my bread!" "You mean that you would like to do some odd jobs, or see yellow sun-drawers or even black-curtain?" indignantly queried the old gentleman. "I don't call that work!" "Nor I either," retorted Nell. "Then, what do you mean?" said Mr. Brown. "That I shall be glad to undertake any sort of honest work by means of which I can earn my own living."

On Popocatepetl's Peak.

An ascent of Popocatepetl has just been made by a party of Americans. Starting at 3:20 p. m. Shortly after we began the ascent of the mountain, passing through narrow passes, now on the brink of a precipice, ever in danger of being dashed to pieces by a misstep. We ascended the mountain by a route that was not marked on the map, and the descent was made by a route that was not marked on the map. The ascent was made by a party of Americans. Insane as a Lioness.

From Texas G. W. Palmer came to Colorado and began to hunt antelope and deer for a livelihood. He throws the lasso with the accuracy of a rifleman. Up on Harderamble mountain a few days ago he halted before a half-entire deer that had been killed by a lioness. The lioness was a magnificent animal, and the beast and its habits, Palmer concluded that there were a lioness and her cub near by, and he determined to capture her, and returning to his cabin, a short distance away, he procured several traps and snares, and set them out cautiously, and finally discovered the lioness with her cub beneath a projecting rock. It was then that he motioned to his son, who followed at his heels, to stop, and instructing him to make his appearance at a trail from him, he left the path to mount the rocks that sheltered the beast. Reaching the summit, he uncoupled the rope from his arm and prepared to make the battle. The signal was given to the brave young man, and he made his appearance at a short distance from the lioness. The lioness was about to leap forward, but the father stepped the loop over her head. There was a brief struggle in which the noise of the lioness' claws on the rocks was secure upon the hind legs. The end of the rope had been previously thrown over the limb of a tree whose boughs spread around, and the contest began in earnest. After a terrific struggle Palmer succeeded in suspending his prize in the air, and fastening the rope securely, he sprang from the rocks, and proceeded to tie the remainder of the limbs. Accomplishing this, he thought it absurd to grasp it, but the little fellow turned as quick as a cat upon his back and fastened his claws in his throat. He held on like a leech, while the father, who had found it impossible to extend himself, shouted to his son to cut the lioness's throat. This was ineffectual, however, and throttling the infant lion with his left hand, he pressed down with all his might, and it was not until he had almost killed the animal that he was enabled to release the claws from his father's neck. Yesterday Mr. Palmer returned in the city with both of the animals, and caged them in Schloss's old building.—Papa, Take He.
