CURRENT TOPICS.

THE supreme court of Kansas has ruled that the circulation of an offensive article about a candidate for office is a 'privileged' proceeding, "even though the principal matters contained in the article are untrue and derogatory,' provided that such articles be circulated 'only among voters." Should such a publication fall into the hands of an alien it is apparently a libel.

"Satisfaction guaranteed" and "confidence observed."

A RECENT letter from Florida says that no doubts can be entertained as to the rapidity and permanence of new settlements in Florida; that they are springing up as if by magic all over the length and breadth of the land, and that prices are obtained for town lots which would appear fabulous in many of the old cities of the east. It is claimed that the population of the state has nearly doubled since 1880.

THE case of the Sarah Burr will case in New York is a leading event in law circles, and the will being sustained, $500,000 will be divided in 55 charities. Morris Lasker, of Galveston, Tex., who accompanied the remains of his prother, Edward Lasker, to Germany, has returned. He thinks that Bismarck, having discovered his mistake in excluding official recognition of Herr Lasker's funeral services, endeavored to magnify the resolution passed by Congress into a political document, and thus weaken the sympathy of the people with the ideas which Dr. Lasker advocated. Bismarck entortains a personal dislike for Minister Sargent on account of the trouble about American pork, yet all but the most servile of the official press speak of him in terms of high respect. Mr. Lasker believes that nothing would suit the German Chancellor better than to have Minister Sargent recalled in connection with this affair, as future American representatives would then be very guarded in incurring his (Bismarck's) animosity. The latter has before attenupted to secure the recall of representatives in the

Sweet-Minded Women.

So great is the influence of a sweetminded woman on those around her that it is almost boundless. It is to her that friends come in seasons of sickness and sorrow for help and comfort. One soothing touch of her kindly hands works wonders in the feverish child; a few words let fall from her lips in the ear of a sorrowful sister do much to raise the load of grief that is bowing its victim down to the dust in anguish. The husband comes home vith the pressure of business, and feeling irritable with the world in general: but when he enters the cozy sitting om, and sees the blaze of the bright and meets his wife's smiling face, h succumbs in a moment to the sooning influences, which act as the balm of Gile ad to his wounded spirit. We all are wearied with combating with the stern realities of life. The rough schoolboy flies in a rage from the taunts of his companions to find solace in his mother's smile; the little one, full of grief with its own large trouble, finds a haven of rest on its mother's breast; and so one might go on with the instances of the influence a sweet-minded woman has in the social life with which she is connected - 20c a pound | Beauty is an insignificant power when compared with hers.

James Atherton, the alleged defaulting treas are of Oscoda county, was acquitted. The following is a synopsis of the case: On March 18, 1883, James Atherton, Treasurer of Oscoda county, arrived in East Saginaw from Detroit, and reported having lost $1,800, a portion of which was county funds. Subsequentity the Prosecuting Attorney of Oscoda County, John Kettle, claimed that Atherton did not lose the money, and the Board of Supervisors removed him from office, and appointed another person treasurer. It was also claimed that Atherton was a defaulter to the amount of $2,000, and he was arrested charged with emhezzlement. The trial took place at Mode, the jury disagreed. A change of venue to Crawford county was obtained, and the second trial resulted in Atherton's acquittal, the Judge also holding that Atherton is still Treasurer of Oscoda County. Atherton served in a Michigan regiment during the entire war, was a faithful soidier, and always bore an excellent reputation. He has a hoet of friends in Oscoda County who will feel gratified at his acquittal. Peter Schmitz, a well to do carpenter and builder of Chicago, choked his pregnant wife to death and went away, wandering helplessly and aimlessly about the city. He left three children by a former wife, the oldest, a girl of 16, in the house. It appears the stepmother was harsh with them, and they feared to go to her room, so the discovery of the crime was not made for some time after the deed was committed, when the daughter ventured in and saw her prother dead. The police were notified. Later in the day Mathias S. hmitz, not a relative, but an intimate friend, met the marderer. The latter confessed the crime. The other took the murderer into custosly and delly red took the murderer into custody and delivered him to the authorities. Schmitz seems dazed. He says he doesn't know why he did the deed. The rubel fire had now almost ceased, except on the extreme right and left. The British stepged forth as if on a holiday parade, the bag pipes palying and the Highlanders footing cheerly. They advanced until within 300 yards of the rebel position, where an old sugar mill, survounded by a number of huts, and a fort with two guns were situated. Here a halt was ordered and the scouts rejoined the cavalry. Nether force seemed disposed to open fire. At last "attention" was called, whereupon the rebels, seeing the British move, began the battle with a shell from a Krupp gun which passed wide over the square. The next shots were aimed with greater securacy, and the shells burst close to the British, wounding several. The retels maintained a rattling fusilade, while the English advanced steadily in a square without answering the rebel fire, till they passed north of the rebel works. At this point a piece of shell wounded Baker Pasha and twenty men were hit. After an echelon of a thousand yards a halt was ordered and the men directed to lie down. It was now noonday, clear, and the winds dispersed the smoke of the rebel fire, disclosing the rebels movements. Then the British opened fire with guns and Martisi riff's, causing the rebels movements. Then the British opened fire with guns and Martisi riff's, causing the rebels fire to rapidly slacken and almost cease. At this the bugle again sounded an advance. The troops rose, wheeled on the ceater of the square and approached the rebel works. The rebels were in no military order, but scattered here and there, so as to take advantage of the abundant cover which the ground afforded. They clumg to their position with desperate tenacity. There were 2,000 rebels directly in front, while Lany hundreds hung around two sides of the square as the British moved for ward, firing as they advanced. The rebels, armed with spears and huge cross-filled swords, rose within 200 yards of the advancing lines and rushed against the British at break-neck speed, heedless and fearless of death. The rebels fell right and left, though some of the brave fellows reached within five paces of the square. They only fell back suddenly when they were forced. This they stormed and succeeded in dislodging 200 rebels, who leaped the fort and charged from every opening. The rebels finally gave way, and bolted.

The British pursued the rebels as they fell but and advanced as far as the fresh water wells of Teb, where the rebels made their last stand. Sheikhs, who advanced empty handed to show that they bore charmed lives, were stricken down with bayonet thrusts. The Highlanders carried the hext outwork, capturing three gues. At the end of four hours' arduous lighting the British garbed possession of the rebel camp of huts and wells. The cavalry on the right flank charged the retreating rebels, who did not bolt, but met the troopers who rode among them, giving blow for blow. A splendid display of heroism was made by three mounted rebels. They resolutely malutained their ground against the shocek of twe cavalry charges. In the third charge they were cut down, but not before they had killed several men and wounded Col. Barrow with their spears. The enemy retired sullening and in consequence the British kept up their firing for a long time after the fortunes of the day had been decided.

All our Drain Tile are made of Fire Clay, are funusual strength and light weight, which ma-grially reduces the breakage and expense of ansportation. ransportation.

The ditching for this class of tiling is less expensive, as they do not require to be laid below frost out only deep enough to escape the plow.
While this is more economical it also aids obtaining a better "fall" or grade to the drain.

Machine of the Age." To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune. DWIGHT, Ill., March 16 .- One of the strongest and m sat convincing facts that I have yet seen with regard to tile drainage is brought out in the December report of the Agricultural Department of Illinois. It is this: Acreage in corn in Livingston County,

'Tile, the Createst Labor-Saving

Acreage in corn in Logan County, 1881. 140,859 Livingston over Logan ..... 127,738

the beauty of the whole is that it was done with half the work! Mr. Editor, suppose a kind Providence should lengthen out the spin of our days until we saw Illinois thoroughly tile-drained, where would be put the corn that this State would produce, and what would we do with our "silver dollars?"

A PERFECT TREASURE.

I am not the man to have hobbies, but 7nat I like is plate, good service-able gold and silver. It is whispered by malignant persons that I would not give so many dinner-parties, if it were not to exhibit these. I am not conscious of such a motive for my hospitality, but if it exists it need not surely be objected to; it is I who have to pay for the weakness, and not my friends. Last Wednesday we happened to have rather a large dinner party; I had been dining out a good deal at various clubs lately, and of course it was necessary to invite my entertainers in return. The dinner had gone off uncommonly well. The ladies had retired to the drawing-room, and I had just passed the vine-leaf claret jug to Col. Twankay, when Bowles stooped down and whispered in my ear that a person wished to see me in the hall upon busi-"Ask him what it is," said I. "It is impossible that I leave my guests."

"I did ask him, sir, and he refused to state," replied Bowles confidentially. "It is my opinion he's a begging-letter impostor; but he says he must see you in person." I was upon the point of saying, "Tell him to leave the house," when something or other in Bowles' manner struck me so decidedly that I resolved not to do so. Perhaps I placed rather too much confidence in my butler. Actuated by a vague presentment of disgust and danger, I arose from the table, made a hasty apology to my friends, and went with Bowles into the hall. A shabby-genteel sort of person was standing by the umbrella stall. "What is it you want with me, sir?"

said I in a magisterial tone. "One minute's private conversation with you," he replied, with a glance at the butler.

"You may leave us Bowles," said I, and he withdrew accordingly, although I am bound to say, very unwillingly. The thought flashed across me like lightning, "Bowles has something to ear from this man's disclosure," and the next words of my visitor confirmed me in the suspicion. "I am a member of the detective police force," said he, "and I came to warn you that there is something wrong

"Well," returned I with hesitation, and feeling very glad that Mrs. Mat-enam was not a third party to this interview, "I know some, of course, better than others.

"Just so," said the detective, quietly; "then I must see them." This was a shocking proposal, and made me feel hot all over; but still I was not going to run any risk with those shield-shaped salvers. Major Pinkey I now remembered, had expressed a great wish to examine them and perhaps that fact had had some weight in my inviting him to dinner. Who the deuce Major Pinkey was—except that he belonged to my club—I certainly knew no more than the detective and perhaps a great deal less. Still, it seemed a very base thing to open the dining room and let this fellow scrutin ze my guests, in hopes to find a scoundrel among them.

"Upon my life," said I, "Mr. Detective, I can't do it." "Very right, sir-very natural," replied he, smiling in his quiet way. "It would never do, would it? But, look you, sir; I'm a waiter, a hired waiter. Who is to know that I have not business at your side-board. In one minute I could run my eyes over the whole lot, and spy my man if he's there." I did not like even this arrangement; but sending for Bowles I arranged with him the plan of the proceeding, and then returned to the dining-room. After a period of anxiety no measure of time could indicate, the supposed waiter took his departure.

"Please sir, you are wanted again," whispered Bowles as he brought in another bottle of claret. I once more sought the inspector.

The one I am after is not among them, sir, as far as I know," observed this official jerking his thumb in the direction of the dining-room. "Are you sure there are no other men in your house besides those I have already seen?"

"Yes," said I, "there are no more." "Then I must now have a look at the

The Monjula. During all the time that Brazil re-

"fatherland" introduced but one labor-

saving machine into the empire. No race of people on the globe could better any mechanical contrivance devised To see, upon going outdoors, that the ground is not covered with frost, and that the flowers (such as they are) If they could live their time in entire, uninterrupted idleness, and pay their undivided attention to the proper consumption of villainous eigarettes, unalloyed happiness and contentment would be theirs. The people must have possessed the same trait of character To come across gardens in which plants and vegetables are growing in great variety and luxuriantly in this ligent of the weal of their South American foster children, and so disregarded the demands of the race which desired labor savers and was so saving of labor they couldn't make the labor savers, that but one idea was exported into the empire. From the earliest days of the country the people had ground their mandioca flour by pounding the roots in a rude mortar. This requires considerable physical exertion, even for a slave, and the introduction of a cheap substitute was probably hailed with delight. The monjula is the name of the contrivance designed to do this work and to-day you will see numbers of the things over the empire, doing their work with an appearance of laziness very much in keeping with the natives. Shall I describe this great labor saver? Here it is: A beam twenty or thirty feet long is balanced horizontally on an upright post which may be of any height from six to ten feet. One end of this beam terminates in a sort of a hammer or pestle, which is in juxtaposition with a rude wooden mortar set upon the ground. At the opposite end of the beam is a shallow wooden box that is filled with water directed into it by a series of water-works, ditches and troughs. The water pours into the box until it is filled when it overbalances the pestle end and falls. This movement empties the bex went the beam returns to its position and drops into the mortar, dealing a heavy blow to the mandioca roots piaced there to be pulverized. The box fills again and by this alternate filling and emptying and consequent lifting and dropping of the wooden trip-hammer the mandioca is finally ground with no more manual exertion than is needed to place the raw material into the mortar and take the finished flour therefrom after the monjula has done its work. In this way this intricate piece of machinery thumps away, killing time and crushing mandioca. One man groped into the snow and caught him by the leg; another got a purchase on his arm, and others gripping him by clothing and body, in due time he was brought to his feet again. He presented a sorrowful spectacle, however. His hat looked like a half-inflated concertina, his coat was torn, and his collar hung only by the button on the back of his shirt, and wherever he dis-closed a lodging place for the snow in his raiment or person, there the chill-ing element had established itself. He was apparently lifeless, also, and a great crowd collected, with every manifestation of sympathy. The stranger soon revived, he sighed and opened his eyes, the flush of life returned to his ashen cheek. He saw the concourse about him and smiled, opened his mouth to speak, and as the people crowded around to hear him, said: "Ah-h! that was a narrow escape for me. The perils of winter, even in this temperate zone, are indeed fearful. But how much more terrible are they in the frozen regions of the pole. I have here"—and he opened a sachel which had survived the shock—"the new book describing the sufferings and death of the De Long party, for which I am taking subscriptions and which I should be pleased to sell you at"—but here somebody yelled that another snow-slide was coming, and the crowd

The cumulative power of money is a fact very generally known, but not gen-erally appreciated. There are few men living at the age of 75, hanging on to fact, falls into a stage in which he would be liable to be called drunk ordinarily, though, in fact, he is merely of kindred or friends, but might, by exercising the smallest particle of thrift, rigidly adhered to in the past, have set aside a respectable sum which would materially help them to maintain their independence in their old age. Let us take the small and insignificant sum of 5 cents, which we daily pay to have our boots blacked, to ride in a car the distance we are able to walk, or to procure a bad cigar we are better without, and see what its value is in the course of years. We will suppose a boy of 15, by blacking his own boots, or saving his car-fare, or going without his cherished cigarette, puts by 5 cents a day; in one year he saves $18,35, which being banked bears interest at the rate of 5 per cent, per annum, compounded bi-yearly. On this basis, when our thrifty youth reaches the age of 65, having set his 5 cents per day religiously aside during fifty years, the result is surprising. A Century Ago.

Colonel T. W. Higginson thus writes n Harper's Magazine: "Mrs. Washngton's reception were reproached as inductory to the pageantry of courts,' but it was very modest pageantry. Nothing could have been less festive or more harmless than the hospitality of the Presidential abode. An English manufacturer who was invited there to breakfast reports a meal of admirable simplicity-tea, coffee, sliced tongue, dry toast and butter-but no broiled fish, as is the general custom,' he adds. At her evening receptions Mrs. Washington offered her guest tea and coffee with plum-cake; at 9 she warned her visitors that the General kept early hours, and after this remark the guests had no choice but to do the same. "At these entertainments of hers the President was but a guest-without his sword-and found it necessary also to retreat in good order at the word of command. His own receptions were for invited guests only, and took place every other week between 3 and 4 p. m. The President stood before the fireplace in full black velvet, with his hair powdered and gathered into a bag; he wore yellow gloves and silver buckles, with a steel-hilted sword in a white mained a dependency of Portugal, the leather scabbard; he held in his hand a cocked hat with a feather. This is the description given by William Sullivan in his 'Familiar Letters on Publie Characters.'

"If it was the object of Washington to make these occasions stiffer than the drawing-rooms of any crowned potentate, he succeeded. Names were announced, gentlemen were presented, the President bowed but never shook hands; at 3:15 the doors were closed and the visitors formed a circle; the President made the circuit, addressing a few words to each; they then bowed and retired. It is hard to imagine that these mild entertainments could have been severely consured as extravagant or monarchical; one can better comprehend how the censure could be applied to the street equipage of the new President, the cream-colored carriage painted in medallions, and the liveries of white turned up with green. Yet these were, perhaps, more readily recognized as essential to the dignity of his station. It was with the desire of promoting this dignity that the senators of the new nation were anxious to give the President an official title. The plan was said to have originated with John Adams, who believed 'splendor and majesty' to was a joint committee of congress to consider the matter.

A few days ago Mr. Swift let his 3 year old daughter ride upon his horse, and after she had ridden about forty rods from home he lifted her off the animal and told her to run home. On returning home about an hour later he found that the little one had not reached home, and, going to the place where he had seen her last, he found bear tracks in the sand. A posse was formed, and all night was spent in searching for the lost child. In the morning, as the searchers were passing a swampy spot where the underbrush | that two-thirds of all cases, both acute was thick, they heard her voice. They and chronic, could be cured as I was called to the girl to come out of the bushes, but she replied that the bear would not let her. Then the men crept through the brush and when near the spot heard a splash in the water, which the child said was the bear. They found her standing on a log, extending half way across the swamp, and it seemed as though the bear had undertaken to cross the swamp on the log, and, being pursued, left the child and got away as rapidly as possible. She had received some scratches about the face, arms and legs, and her clothes were almost torn from her body, but her, only the marks of his teeth being found on her back, where he had taken hold of her clothes to carry her. One of the most singular features is the location of the ostrich's stomach. He carries it on his back be tween his shoulders, and the food can be seen winding around inside of his neck to get at this out-of-the-way receptacle.

(Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.) To any one who has studied the laws of life, and especially those which relate to reproduction, an experience such as we are about to relate, will come with special force and interest. The transmission of certain mental traits of prominence, and of certain physical traits of equal prominence, are facts which all acknowledge, but which none can understand. The father may be distinguished,—the son, an imbecile;or, the parent may be decrepit and unknown, and the child acheive the highest place possible to humanity. But through t all, there will be certain characteristies which mark the individual as deseending from certain ancestors. Too often, indeed, these characteristics are

"I felt the beginning of this heredi tarv taint many years ago, in vague pains, which seemed to come unaccountably and at uncalled for times. They were annoying, exhausting, and interfered not only with my duties. but also totally destroyed my happiness. At first, they would be only transient, appearing for a day or two, and then isappearing; then again they would come in such violent forms, that it was impossible for me to lift a cup to my mouth. Afterwards, my feet and hands swelled so that it was impossible for me to draw on my shoes or gloves without the greatest effort. I realized what the difficulty was but seemed powerless to avert it. I finally became so bad that I was confined to the house and to my bed most of the time. My joints pained me continuously and my feet swelled to enormous proportions. Knowing that I inherited this tendency, I had about abandoned hope, when I began the use of a remedy, which was recommended be important in a republic; and there to me by a friend as being specially efficient in eases of a similar kind.
