THE LONG MURDER.

Matters Look Dark for Long. The following account of the murder of Mrs.

county, is from the Detroit Free Press of June 17:

The house where the murder was committed stands on the north part of the farm of Noah Kroutz, in the township of North Plains. It is a one story frame building, about 18x27 feet. A porch or veranda runs along the eatire front. A door from this opens into a large sitting room. Back of this is a kitchen and a small bedroom opening into the latter. Off the front room is a small bedroom, where the crime was committed, with one door opening into the room first mentioned and two windows, one opening into the verandah and the other towards the south.

opening into the verandah and the other towards the south.

Through this last mentioned window the husband says the murderer reached with his club, which was a stake about three feet long, and which for weeks past has been used on the premises to fasten a stable door. It was dis-covered about half an hour after the first alarm covered about half an hour after the first alarm was given, lying near the south end of the versuda, about six feet from the latter and ten from the south window, covered with clotted blood. This room is eight feet square and the bed, standing with its head towards the south, entirely filled its space on the west side of the south window. Reaching into the window to hit the head of this bed at the center a man standing on the ground outside would, as your reporter proved by experiment, be obliged to have his body more than half into the room, in fact be balancing himself on his hips.

The deceased, Mrs. Lucy Long, formerly Miss Nickerson, was 26 years of age and her busband 25. They have been married nearly four years, and have no children. They were alone in the house the night of the murder, sleeping in the front bed-room above mentioned. Up to two weeks since they slept in the back bed-room, but changed at Mr. Long's urgent request. On Wednesday last the husband Andrew Long, drew from a Muir bank $152.50 belonging to the mother of his wife, who was coming after it on Saturday morning.

LONG'S STORY

Is that they retired about 9 o'clock, he sleeping on the backside of the bed. The body of his wife being shown to have rested upon the ends of both pillows in the center of the narrow bed he admits he had only fourteen incress in which to lie, and says he did not use the pillow. He says he was awakened by his wife making a gurgling noise, and loo king up saw a man reaching into the window and striking her with a club. He sprang up and caught the club, when another man appeared at the window and began cutting him with a knife on the hands and finally he felt a cut in his side and let go, crying out that he would get his gun. He went through the long front room into the kitchen and thence into the back bed room, got his gun and returned to the front bedroom. He discovered that his pants, which lay in the center of the floor and contained the $150 50, were gone and the window closed. He thrust his gun through a pane of glass and fired. Then he went to the front door and went about twenty-five rods to the house of a neighbor named Frank Connor, and then to that of Noah Kroutz, a brother in law. At both places his irst exclamation was: 'Some one has come to my house and killed my wife and cut my hands all to pieces.'' Connor's wife would not let him go, but Kroutz and his hired man, John Duel went immediately. They found Long on the veranda and a light in the house. They found Mrs. Long yet breathing but with her head beaten almost out of shape. The skull was broken into twenty pieces and clotted blood an irich thick was on her face. She continued to breathe for about ten minutes. The bed was flooded with blood, the carpet soaked and the walls fleeked with it. The head of the bedstead had been hit six times just over her head and was split by three blows striking in the same place, LONG'S STORY blows striking in the same place, CONTRADICTOY FACTS. Among a few of the facts which contradict the husband's story are these: The grass be-neath the window is undisturbed. It is only three and one-half feet from the ground to the window sill, but even a tail person cannot stand on the ground and with the club in question reach the center of the bed and strike a blow with any strength. The window was fastened with an eight-penny nail the night before, which was broken newly in two on Saturday morning. There was not the slightest mark of the window being forced from the outside, but bloody finger marks were plain around the stub of the nail and on the opposite side where one might, in the dark, be feeling for the nail from the inside. His pants which were afterwards found in the road, without the money, had no blood upon them except one finger mark, although the floor where he says they lay up to the time above mentioned was covered with blood. The cuts in his shirt are three or four inches long, but his slesh was barely cut into, and Dr. Smith will testify that there is only one cut on the body. The cuts on his hands are mere scratches. A heavy water pitcher stood against the window and he might have used it as a weapon, but it was not disturbed.

The beet shows every sign of having but one disturbed.

The bed shows every sign of having but one occupant, and the spattered blood on the wall below the head of the mattress shows that nothing higher than the mattress could have been tetween Mrs. Long and the wall. He recognized the bloody club as belonging to the stable, when pleked up in the dark at a distance of several feet. The cuts in the shirt look like razor cuts. These things and the improbability of a burglar knowing just where to strike in the dark, or reaching through the to strike in the dark, or reaching through the window to scare the family with a club, to ob-tain pantaloons which lay upon the floor, or fight for the possession of a club which they threw away a moment after, or neglects their opportunity to climb in the window when the family were asleep, or do so and obtain the money while a man inside was after a gun, make it look bad for the husband.

THE MURDERER'S APPEARANCE. Long is strong, stout built man about five eet nine inches in height, weighs about 160 our.ds and wears a light mustache. He takes The remains of Mrs. Long were interred at Palo on Sunday, the 15th. It was expected that Long would be present at the funeral; but a short time before it occurred an organization was discovered to lynch Long, and he was not taken from the jail.

LOUISVILLE AND NEW ORLEANS.

A Card from Gov. Begole Regarding the Importance of Exhibits,

EXECUTIVE OFFICE. To the People of the State of Michigan.

I deem it my duty in view of the importance of the subject, to call your attention to the Louisyille Exposition to be hald at the city of Louisville Exposition to be held at the city of Louisville, Ky., from August 16 to October 26, 1884, both inclusive; and also to the New Orleans exposition, commencing Dec 4, 1884, and closing not later than May 31, 1885.

The exhibit made by the West Michigan Farmers' Club at Louisville last fall was most creditable to the industries represented, and the beneficial results to the state have already manifested themselves in increased immigration, and the constant inquiries made as to the resources of Michigan from all sections of the country.

It is contemplated to have a full exhibit of the agricultural, pomological and mineral productions of Michigan.

The native woods of the state in a finished and unfinished condition will also be a marked feature.

It will readily be seen of how great and far reaching importance a full and complete exhibit of the resources of the State of Michigan must be to its people.

No appropriation was made by the legislature of 1883 to defray the expenses of such an exhibition on the part of the state, and I therefore feel it incumbent on me to urge upon all ville and New Orleans expositions, a credit to our great and growing state, and a means of materially increasing its growth and pros-

THE leading educational question of the hour is how shall our public schools be directed so that they shall most efectually aid the cause of labor? Special schools for the promotion of the fine arts are much to be desired; but above and beyond them, and of paramount importance, stand educational institutions in which the millions of boys and girls growing up into manhood and womanhood shall have opportunities for familiarizing themselves, to some extent, at least, with the practical duties of life.

TEN years ago a penniless man, with a peculiarly shaped head, made a bargain with a London professor of anatomy by which the latter was to have the head on payment of the man's funeral for his trip, are roasting and working expenses. Meanwhile the man became at home, without even the privilege of wealthy, and when he died the other day his friends tried to avoid fulfilling the contract. But the professor insisted, and the matter is to be brought before the law courts. Pending the decision, the defunct gentleman has been buried with his head on his shoulders.

CHAPTER XIII.

"Roland Sabine, take this!" With a spring like a panther, Darrell was upon the would-be murderer; and so swift and so sure was the fierce blow of the clubbed pistol that without cry or groan the wretched man fell with a crash to the floor and lay motionless.

Darrell turned, the pistol fell from his hand, and his foot was on the ladder-like stairs that led up to the next floor, when a white garment fluttered through the gloom

"Philip!"-and in another moment Ilma had thrown herself into her lover's

Voiceless, tearless, was that wild, close embrace at the awful gate of eternity, that agony of joy, that agony of woe, lip o lip, heart to heart, once more for the ast time. What years of anguish she had seemed to pass through while she waited and waited in the darkness of dread, and knew not whether he had been swept down the rushing stream to a fearful death! And now they had met, and her prayer at least was answered-he might die with her, if he could not save her.

For two minutes all was forgotten in their wild rapture, and then Darrell spoke hurr edly-

"lima, there is still hope; I will not despair till Death's hand is upon us. Come with me."

There was no hope in Ilma's dark eyes, which were raised to her lover's face; but death had no terror now, for he was wish her. He half led, half carried her to the floor below, and passed straight to the only aperture, the window by which he entered. The waters flowed a few feet beneath them, bathed in the silvery moonlight. After one look, Darrell folded his arms more closely round the girl's fragile form and set his teeth, hope almost pying in his heart. He bent over the sweet ace that rested upon his breast, and his burning tears fell upon the girl's brow. "Oh, Ilma, Ilma, I have brought woe and death to you!" "Philip"-oh, the pain in her trembling voice I-"was it not truth that I spoke to you in the sunshine yesterday? Shall I say to you again now-so near the grave -that one hour of happiness is better than years of dull content? To have won your love-love that more than risked life only to die with me"-and her face lighted up with glorious brightness-"oh, my heart, is not this more than a thousand years could give me, never knowing such

He could not answer her. The quivering lips that pressed hers were silent; and the waters rushed on, leaping and bounding. After a few moments, two more victims would be carried away towards the sea. The curse was fufilled to the uttermost-"life for life." "Philip"-and Ilma's voice was very low and almost pleading-"you have not The fierce passion that prompted the deadly blow leaped like lightning into

Darrell's dark eyes. Would you have had me spare such a vil-

The girl trembled and hid her face. "Let me pray for strength to forgive him, Philip. He offered me life if I would be his wife. I chose death. Then he

"Go on," said Darrell hoarsely; "let me know all." "He said that he would send to you and tell you my fate; for he knew you would come to die with me. My prayer to spare you only angered him the more, for he saw how I loved you."

"You humbled yourself to him who dared give you choice between his base passion and death? You, my betrothed wife, knelt to him, and for me? Oh, Heaven," said Philip Darrell, raising his elenched right hand and his livid face to the moonlit sky, "thou dost not claim from mortal man pardon for crime so black, for wrong so foul as this avenged to-night!" The girl trembled at that awful appeal on the brink of death; yet her own passionate soul had almost echoed it.

"Philip," she whispered, after a few moment's silence, "let there be no stern memory even of him in your heart or mine now. See, the waters are rising, and the foundations of the Mill shake beneath us! The time is so short, Philip, before-before the last struggle!"

Her voice faltered, and the golden head sank upon his breast. The strong man ground his teeth in the potency of des-pair as his dark eyes sought in vain over the surface of the flood for any chance of escape. If he could see some object near enough to give the faintest hope of reaching it by swimming, he would risk all on that hope; but, after all, it was not certain that the Mill's foundation would yield; and he knew that to trust himself and lima to the swollen tide in the expectation of reaching either shore would be madness. At ne he could not, though a strong and expert swimmer, hope to resist the force of the current; how then could he with Ilma?

The drops of agony stood on his brow as he bent over his darling, doomed by his fatal love to an awful death; and the words of the curse seemed to ring back in his ears-

... Ti I the waters, rising, rising, Bring the bounden sacrificing-

Life for life for traitor's deed!" The moon was veiled, and darkness fell over the water. In vain did Darrell strive to pierce the gloom. Oh, for a ray of light! The cloud was passing, its edges gleamed with silver; the moon peeped t; and suddenly Darrell uttered a cry.

Ilma started, and followed his gaze. A dark heavy mass lay athwart the stream, rolling and rocking in the angry waters. Darrell at once perceived that it was the greater portion of the piers of the famous bridge that Anneris Darrell had refused to cross. Quick as lightning his practised eye measured the distance between the Mill and the mass of timber, and he calculated the chances of reachin it. At that moment something crashed below, and the old Mill shivered and shook.

"Ilma," said Sir Philip rapidly, "there is one hope—It lies there. If we can reach that pier before it swings round ---He said no more, but sprang to the sill, clasping the slight form firmly with his "Cling to me, darling-so. Now Heaven

He dropped into the tide which was only a few feet beneath the window. Not a cry broke from the brave girl; not for one second did she lose presence of mind as the cruel waters seized their prey; but she held her lover as he had told her, so as to leave him almost free. The pier lay not a hundred yards distant; if Darrell could keep affoat for one minute, he and his precious burden must be driven up against the pier, and he could climb to almost certain

"Courage!" he whispered, though ever in that wild moment he knew the exhortation was needless; for the steadfast eyes were fearless. A whirling mass of water, a deafening roar in their ears, something huge and black before their eyes, and Darrell's right hand was clutching with an iron grip a beam of the pier. His fragile burden seemed less than feather-weight as he swung her upwards and she grasped the next beam. In another moment they were on the pier. and Philip Darrell had clasped the girl, trembling and breathless, to his breast.

Saved, saved—almost, but not quite.
There was danger yet. If the Mill should fall before the pier swung round, its fragments, dashing up against the pier, might turn it over, and death would then be the position of the fugitives was secure: and even in their great peril both gazed in awe and admiration upon the magnin-cent spectacle before them.

The villagers on the bank had seen them. and a mighty shout went up, and hat and handkerchiefs were waved. The shoul came to them faintly through the roar of the weir, and Darrell waved his hand; but he never moved his eyes from the Mill save once, when he looked down into the starlike eyes fixed, like his, on the white walls, and pressed one kiss on the half-

Slowly the ark of refuge began to move. The current had caught one end, and the unwieldy mass swung round. Darrell watched the slow, gradual movement in deathlike silence. Clasped so closely to him, Ilma could feel every heavy throb of his heart, and silently she offered up a prayer for both.

After three minutes of suspense, the der swung clean round, and drifted off apidly with the swift current. Then Il-na, with a passionate sob, hid her face on her lover's breast. He could not speak
—he could only press his trembling lips to her golden curls. Were they saved? Straight down midstream sped the strange bark; and the crowd-running, leaping, shouting, waving hats and handkerchiefs as if such demonstrations could aid the fugitives-kept pace along the bank. three minutes more the Mill was far distant.

"And the landscape sped away behind, Like an ocean flying before the wind," "Would to Heaven," said Darrell, lookg back, "I could know if my brave Hassan's life was saved !" They had passed the last straggling ouse in Scarth Abbot, and now the stream flowed less rapidly, and the moving panoama glided by more gently.

"Bear up still, darling," whispered Darrell; "Heaven will not desert us at the last. The life has been given, the life saved. The prophecy is fulfilled indeed." "I know we shall be saved, Philip!"and she raised her face with a trusting smile. She looked back. "The Mill is still standing-see!" Darrell looked back and saw the Mill standing, tall and white, in the moonlight but as he gazed the walls tottered, and, for the first time that awful night, Ilma shricked aloud as the mass of woodwork fell over into the river. In awe Philip Darrell and his companion gazed still towards where the Mill had once stood. The thoughts of both turned to the guilty being swept away with the ruin to a terrible retribution; and even Darrell's stern wrath was softened, for he held his darling to his breast-saved-while the dead man's mother would weep in vain for the son who should never greet

A roar of many voices from the bank made Sir Philip and Ilma turn quickly, Driven by a cross-current, their craft had altered her course, and was drifting rapidy inland. What a shout rang back from Darrell to the frantic crowd! It seemed as if all the villages within ten miles round had sent forth their population; for Scarth Abbot could not bring together such a throng. Darrell could now distinguish several of the Court servants and others whom he knew; and some one shouted in stentorian tones that there was a carriage near; but for the most part the spectators could only shout inarticulately and weep and laugh together for very joy.

Nearer yet! There were stalwart villagers and farmers up to their knees in water; and one old man was sobbing aloud and crying out brokenly "Yes, 'tis fulfilled. That was it-we've read it all wrong! He's saved the life, and the curse is turned to blessing!" A loud shout was raised by the onlookers. The bridge pier was aground. They were saved, saved by the love that gave all for love's sake. The life was yielded,

How the people, wept, and shouted for joy! How they called down blessings on lima's golden head, and on her valiant lover who had breasted the raging floods for her sake, and borne her in safety through all! Strong arms and gutle would have relieved him of his charge; but he would not loose his clasp. Besuddenly from darkness to brilliant light. Ilma clung convulsively to her preserver,

"Not to the Larches, Philip, not to the "No, my darling-home to the Grange." Through all he was perfectly collected and strangely calm—there was need of calmness amid all this excitement. Once had he spoken hurriedly, and had almost ants of the Weir Mill. broken down, when he turned to one of

CHAPTER XIV., AND LAST.

The first thing Ilma remembered was a vague sense of rest, then a gentle touch on her brow, and a voice saying very softly, "She is reviving!"—and she knew that voice before she heard the yet softer-spoken "Ilma, my darling!" She opened her eyes and looked up into Philip Darrell's dark face. She was in her own room, and he was kneeling by her, with his arm round her and head pillowed on his breast. "Philip!" she whispered, looking at him intently. Then, as he bent lower yet, tenderly kissing her brow, memory rushed back to her, and, with a muttered cry, she clung to him. "Is it all past? You are saved, Philip?" she said, gasping. "There to no more danger?" "No more, sweetheart," he answered. "This is your own room, and here is aunt

The girl turned suddenly, stretching out her hands and Darrell rose to make way for Miss Durnford, who now wept freely as she clasped Ilma in her arms. "Dear auntie," said the girl, after a long silence, "it has been like an awful dream! I cannot bear to think of it yet!" "And I would rather you did not, my child. I am content to wait. Now take a little of this wize, and I will go and get you some tea; and Sir Philip will take care of you till I come back." And she went out, leaving them alone together.

Theu lima told her lover more of the details of all that had passed before he had reached the Mill, and how Roland had removed the ladder from the loft where she was imprisoned, so as to cut off her escape; but he had forgotten the shawl in which Joo Heston had wrapped her head, and by fastening this to a ring in the floor she was able to descend. And Roland?

Had nothing been heard of him! Had not his sisters made inquiry? Ilma," said Darrell, "to ask about us both, and if anything was known of Roland. Zeph Heston must have spread the news that he was in the Mill, for every one seemed to know it. Nothing had been heard of Roland by the river. I did not see Rose, of course; but I sent my groom, who is here to make inquiries."

Ilma hid her face, sobbing. "Oh, Philip, aunt Sabine need never know the truth!"

"She must indeed, for your sake, my heart. I cannot have it supposed that you met Roland Sabine in the Mill of your own accord. Another guilty soul beside time.

his, Ilma, has gone to its account for his night's work."

"Aye. The first rush of the flood washed away the cottage where he and Zeph had taken refuge. Hestou was swept across the weir and drowned before the eyes of hundreds.' Ilma shuddered violently.
"And Zeph?" she said, after a long pause. "Was it Zeph who told you where "Yes, dear one. I was riding towards Scarth Abbot-more in a vague fear for you than with any definite thought-when I met her. She seemed to have repented her part almost immediately."

Some idea of Zeph's reason for hating her evidently flashed across Ilma's mind, for her color rose; but she said nothing, only nestling to her lover's breast. Presently she said slowly—

"Philip, it seems so strange that the fulfilment of the prophecy has come about as I always tried to hope it would; and yet it was by a blind faith in only one possible meaning attaching to the words that the true meaning was made manifest."

In silence Darrell bowed his face on the golden head. Love, peace, happiness! All the dark clouds that had shrouded his life were swept away suddenly by the little hand that clung to his-the hand that should yet caress his children. Yesterday he had been a doomed man, and he had cursed the fatal love that had brought woe and death to the woman he loved; to-day, snatched by that love from death, saved by the life laid down to save hers, that woman rested on his breast; and before them both stretched the golden years, bright with dazzling light that now he could not meet. For the first time during that night of passion and anguish, of wild hope, of ineffable dread, of terrible and sustained effort, and blessed certainty of happiness, the strong spirit gave way, and Philip Darrell wept aloud.

Up the village street was born on a hastily-improvised stretcher a bruised, shattered form, still breathing. It was laid down in the common room of the inn. Messengers had already run on to tell Roland's mother and to fetch a doctor, and the doctor was quickly on the spot. He looked down at the disfigured form in pity.

"I can do nothing," he said; "it is use-less to disturb him. He has not five minutes The doctor bent down to the dying man,

From a ghastly gash in his forehead blood was slowly trickling. Roland tried to speak-"Ilma—Dark Darrell—the curse."
"They are saved," said the doctor, his voice trembling with emotion." Sir Philip saved her. They are at the Grange." A sharp spasm contracted the dving man's livid features. He tried to speak again, and in the effort a rush of blood stopped speech and life at once, At the same moment Mrs. Sabine and her two daughters hastened breathlessly through the crowd. "Keep her back !" cried the doctor, hastily drawing a mantle over the crushed form. "This is no sight for his mother!"

A great fragment of the Mill had been washed ashore nearly a mile down the river, and a man was seen clinging to it. Sir Philip Darrell's groom and another had ridden into the water and rescued the hapless creature—Roland Sabine—and the groom then rode on to the Grange to tell his master what had happened.

At one o'clock in the morning the village was still astir, and hardly a house was Another servant from the Court rode into Searth Abbot and up to the Grange with the joyful news that Hassan had galloped into the courtyard half an and both lives redeemed; and thus was Ingelhard's full deed blotted out and the washed away by the flood, and he had washed away by the flood washed washed away by the flood washed washed away by the flood washed washed washed washed away by the flood washed washe made his way unerriugly to his home.

An hour later Sir Puilip himself went out to see what damage had been done, and to ascertain if any lives besides those he already knew of had been lost, and especially to make inquiry about Zeph. . "She was one of them that stood by when we got the Squire ashore," said an "I didn't see her after that,

Sir Philip. One or two others thought she had been outside the inn when the unhappy man was laid on his bier withfu. All doubt lowever was set at rest three dars later, when Zeph's body was cast ashore ten miles below Scarth Abbot. The poor girl had evidently flung herself into the river;

The violets were blooming along the panks of the Coalmere when Ilma Costello became Dark Darrell's bride; and now the vacant place beside the portrait of the last Darrell is filled by the picture of a laaloud. He drifted down the current, and dy with golden hair and soft dark eyes; got to shore and galloped away. It's true, and there are gay doings at the Court, and old Marsh's heart rejoices. But people cannot call the handsome Sir Philip the last of his race any longer; for a winsome lad not three years old, with the true Darrell beauty, is laughing gleefully in the sunshine while riding round the courtyard on Hassan's back, The noble animal seems proud of his tiny burden, as if he ancient race and his loved master's son; and the golden-haired mother looks on She has no fear for the little one: when she heard that Miss Ilma was im- for her husband's hand is on the child, and

Grant's banquet, when Mr. Clements death and life hung in the balance; but remarked, with a smile and his peculiar now it was past-all the dread, the anguish, drawl, "Speaking of banquets reminds me of rather an amusing incident that occurred to me during my stop in smoky, dirty, grand old London. I received an invitaion to attend a banquet there, and I went. It was one of those tremendous dinners where there are eight hundred to nine hundred invited guests. I hadn't been used to that sort of thing, and I didn't feelquite at home. When we took our seats at the tables, I noticed that at each plate was a little plan of the hall, with the position of each guest numbered, so that one could see at a glance where a friend was seated by learning the number. before we fell to, some one-the Lord Mayor, or whoever was bossing the occasion -arose and began to read a list of those present-No. 1, Lord So-and.so; No. 2, the Duke of Something or other, and so on. When this individual read the name of some prominent political character or literary celebrity, it would be greeted with more or less applause. The individual who was reading the names did so in so monotonous a manner that I became tired. and began looking about for something to engage my attention. I found the gentle-man next to me on the right a well-informed personage, and I entered into conversation with him. I had never seen him before. but he was a good talker and enjoyed it. Suddenly, just as he was giving his views upon the future religious aspect of Great Britain, our ears were assailed by a deafening storm of applause. Such a clapping of hands I never heard before. It sent the blood into my head with a rush, and I got terribly excited. I straightened up and commenced clapping my hands with all my might. I moved about in my chair and clapped harder and harder. Who is it?' I asked the gentleman on my right. 'Whose name did he read?' 'Samuel L. Clements,' he answered. I stopped applauding. I didn't clap any more. It kind of took the life out of me, and I sat there like a munmy, and didn't even get up and bow. It was one of the most distressing fixes I ever got into, and it will be many a day before I forget it."

A new poetess from the west remarks: "If love you give, no more I'il When this poetess has gained a little more experience she will learn that there are times when a single cold potato possesses more intrinsic worth than a whole moonlight evening full of love.

Beecher frankly says: "If all the chestnuts that I stole while a boy of thirteen or fourteen in Boston were to rise up before me on the judgment day there would be a pretty wormy to hasten evaporation. HER SECRET TROUBLES. The Unknown Trials Which a Woman ed Without complaint-Why They Vanished.

Near the close of one of the most trying of the few hot days of the present year a pale, care-worn woman might have been seen at the window of her dwelling apparently in a condition of complete exhaustion. Her efforts to turn-from the fresh delights of childmeet the accumulated duties of her hood, through the deeper joys of adohousehold had been great but unsuccesful, while the care of a sick child, whose wails could even then be heard, was added to her otherwise overwhelming troubles. Nature had done much for her and in her youthful days she had been not only beautiful but the possessor of health such as is seldom seen. But home and family duties and the depressing cares which too often accompany them had proven greater than her splendid trength and she felt at that moment not only that life was a burden but that death would be a grand relief. This is no unusual experience. It is in fact a most common, every-day occurrence, and a great prayer is constantly ascending from thousands of homes for deliverance from the deadly power which is enslaving so many wives, mothers, and daughters. And yet these duties of life must be met. No woman can afford to turn aside from the proper care of her home and the ones who are committed to her care, although in doing these duties she may sacrifice her health, and possibly life itself. The experience of one who successfully vercame such trials and yet retained nealth and all the blessings it brings, is thus told by Rev. William Watson, Presiding Elder of the Methodist Episopal church, residing at Watertown, N. Y. He said:

down through overwork and care of a sick member of our household, and I entertained serious apprehensions as to per future. She was languid, pale, utterly exhausted, without appetite, and in a complete state of physical decline. And yet she did not, could not neglect her duties. I have seen her about the horse, trying courageously to care for the ones she loved when I could tell, from the lines upon her face how much she was suffering. At times she would rally for a day or two and then fall back into the state of nervous exhaustion she felt before. Her head pained her frequently, her body was becoming bowed by pain and all hope or enjoyment in life seemed departed. What to do we could not tell. I resolved, however, to bring back her life and vitality if possible and to this end began to treat her myself. To my great relief her system has been toned up, her strength restored, her health completely recovered and wholly by the use of Warner's Tippecanoe, which I regard as the greatest tonic, invigorator and stomach remedy that has ever been discovered. I was led to use it the more readily as I had tested the healthrestoring properties of Warner's Safe Cure in my own person and I therefore knew that any remedy Mr. Warner might produce would be a valuable care no more for things of the world; one. I have since recommended both Warner's Tippecanoe and Warner's and we want only rest and peace. We Safe Cure to many of my friends and I both with great benefit."

Such truths are too love of humanity. We love our kind You can consider yourself engaged as valuable to remain unknown.

The Tin Can's Mission.

The empty tin can at last has a mission, and a profitable one at that. Emptied of its contents of peaches or tomatoes, discarded and thrown out of the kitchen gate, it may soon be sent in the front door or find an honored place in the best room in the house. Thousands of these tin cans are gathered in Philadelphia every week and made into shining sheets and used to decorate or cover large traveling trunks and thus get a promotion from the back-yard to the boudoir. On the outskirts of the city, within a short time, a number of factories for the conversion of these old buffeted and beaten cans and other tin refuse from the ash heaps have sprung up, and the business is a growing one. One of considerable rigorously observed that ugly stories is on Moyamensing avenue, below M fflin street, where a large force of men is kept busy day in and day out. What We Outlive.

There is a French phrase which sums up in six words one's whole experience of life: "Tout passe; tout casse; tout lasse"-everything passes, breaks, fatigues-in time. It is a question of time only. We outlive everything in lescence and the grave satisfaction of successful maturity, down to the very peace of old age.

First of the links which fall from the olden chain is that phantasmagoric and unreal state we call childhoodthat state which makes its own world apart from the real life going on around it, and lives in shadows and dreams, created by imagination, acting on and through ignorance. The griefs which were so violent then as to almost break our heart would now be no heavier than thistledown, no more substantial than a cloud. The joys which made the glad earth a childish paradise tenanted by cherubs for playmates and angels for guardians would now be intolerable if they had to be endured. It is all outlived, and we stand on the burial place of that young past differ-ent in all save name and continued individuality In youth the doubts and fears which so terribly affected us are now as vague and unsubstantial as are the former sorrows of childhood. Before we knew our power or had measured exactly the place we should occupy in the history of our time or the esteem of society—what an infinitude of these doubts and fears distracted us! We were so uncertain of ourselves, if we were sensitive and without much assertion: or if of the more sanguine kind, we made so many bold fights which ended in ignominious tumbles into the gutter before we learned the exact strength of our pinions and what we could do and what we could not! The invitations to high places which gave us so much anxious consideration about the correct shibboeth-the triumphs which were pain rather than pleasure because of shyness and modesty - the bright, burning nopes which seemed as if they would go on forever like the sun and the stars --and which ended in smoke and in

And then our love affairs! The she was cross or he was cold; because she flirted in the corner with Tom, or he gave his arm to the supper-room to Jane! And again the wild unreasoning sign of understanding our prayer! It has all passed! And we have outlived our love for Tom or married Janemuch the same thing. At all events, if we have married, we have outlived folly. fear and know the best and the worst of our portion.

In like manner, if we go on long enough, we outlive the proud joy of fulfilled ambition. The honor which we gave our life to gain becomes to us a mere pinch of dust, a mere name, when our vitality has waned and we when pleasure itself has fallen from us need only to go on long enough to come

Mr. Keene for many years, and I have admired the celerity with which he has run up and down the commercial gamut, if I may use the figure of speech. I used to see him at Delmonico's seated at a table in the corner of the Fifth avenue restaurant, obsequiously waited upon, eating and drinking sparingly, dyspeptic-looking, saturnine, impassive, surrounded by toadies, and continually occupied, even in the hour of dining, with telegrams, notes, cards of would-be callers, and generally taking the part of a Wall street magnate. What with his special trains, his special steamer, his Newport villa, his famous trotters, his pictures, and his enormous wealth, Keene was a notable figure for a while. Sam Ward acted as social guide, philosopher, and friend to Keene when he first arrived here, and Keene, who was never ungrateful and never forgetful of favors received, settled a handsome annuity on the genial old bon vivant.
