A performance of "As You Like It" was given last evening at the Star Theatre. There was a large audience. Miss Adelaide Moore, who played Rosalind for the first time during her present engagement, made an even better impression than she did as Julia. She was picturesque, graceful and, in her male costume, most winning. She treated the scenes with Orlando and Celia in the forest with a light and graceful touch, and was intelligent throughout in her intentions. Miss Moore was most womanly and unaffected. She is handsome and refined and draws a heavy curtain over herself. Pretty women with talent, intelligence and earnestness are rare in the world of the drama. Miss Moore was called before the curtain at the end of third act and much applause followed her next delivery of the epilogue.—New York Herald.
