OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

He Sees About Everything and Prints About Everything He Sees.

I heard Monday that Mrs. Elms was on the war path, because saloon men sold her husband liquor, and that she proposed to haul several of them over the coals if they persisted longer in disregarding her request.

In my walks about town I hear everywhere words of commendation for the management of the homeopathic hospital. Patients and their friends always find it light, airy, clean and cozy as a home. Visitors are always welcome and always go away with words of praise for this model institution.

It is finally decided that the capitol factory is to be moved to Kalamazoo, and I hear a general feeling of disgust expressed by our citizens that the booming organization made no effort to keep it here, but probably that "constitution" and the by-laws of the association prevented anything being done.

There is one thing the council should go a little slow in, and that is in increasing the number of electric lights. The city now has all that it can well afford to pay for. I have heard it remarked on more than one occasion, that there is not a place of this size anywhere that is better lighted, and why not let well enough alone.

I hear considerable complaint about a certain milk dealer watering his milk. It was not long before the consumer got on to his little scheme, and he has already lost several customers on account of his dishonesty. Mind you these customers lived in two blocks, and how many more have quit and are taking of other dealers I have not yet been apprised.

There is every indication that there will be a very large attendance of distinguished strangers in the city during commencement week. The exercises contemplated by aldermen should be made before that time. All the streets in each ward should be gone over, and at least the weeds and burdocks cut down.

The attention of the city authorities has more than once been called to the practice of men and boys walking and lying on the beautiful curvy lawns. This should not be tolerated, and the city has been to consider the expense in keeping it up, and the city to whom was delegated the power to see that it is not destroyed, should take sufficient interest to have it kept beautiful.

That this city is to have a base ball club seems to be assured. It is said that money enough has been subscribed with which to purchase uniforms for the boys, and also to secure the attendance during college vacation of several crack nines from around the state. As there are a goodly number of citizens who in the national game, it is safe to say that the Ann Arbor Browns will draw well.

Our citizens should look after their front yards and private grounds. A little care in this matter will improve immensely the general appearance of the city. Hardly a public gathering takes place here, but what some stranger is so pleased with Ann Arbor that he purchases property and moves his family to the city. If our citizens try they can make the semi-centennial of the university an occasion for booming the place.

The terrible accident which resulted in the death of the only son of a prominent citizen last week, should be a warning to the many small boys who have been in the habit of late of jumping on to and from moving trains. The only wonder is that accidents have not occurred more often, and that parents are not too careful in keeping a watchful eye over their children, and under no circumstances should they be permitted to hang around the cars.

I find considerable kicking about increasing the salary of the mayor, and paying aldermen for their services. People argue that no better men can be induced to become members of the council for a consideration than those who have in the past administered the affairs of the city. That it would only be throwing money away, and if tax payers were given an opportunity to vote on the question it would be buried out of sight.

"How careless some parents are" was remarked in our hearing Sunday, as a number of little children, thinly clad, passed the opera house on their way to Sabbath school. The day was raw and the little fellows looked pinched with the cold. Their very actions denoted their sufferings. And I wondered how mothers could be so careless in clothing their children, when they would not think of venturing out on a chilly day unless warmly dressed.

Just now there is a big racket between the White and Singer sewing machine agents, and war to the knife has been declared. It seems that O'Toole's men, who formerly worked for the Singer company in this city are now selling the White all around the Singer machine, and it is charged that they resort to unfair means. I have investigated the matter and find that the agents for the White are doing a legitimate business, and do not misrepresent anything regarding their machines.

What a disappointment there will be among the 160 or more applicants for the position of mail carriers, when the four persons are named. Of course there are a goodly number if not all of the 160 names presented who would be perfectly willing to serve Uncle Sam, and the selection of the four required is not a very pleasant task for postmaster Duffy. No matter how conscientious he may be in the discharge of this duty, there will be some who will feel that the appointment should come to them.

This time the knights of labor seem to be the patriotic fellows who propose to hold a regular old fashioned Fourth of July celebration, assisted by the various labor organizations in the city. Arrangements I understand are about perfected. As the Fourth this year comes on Monday it is thought a bigger crowd could be induced to come here on the preceding Saturday, and that day has been decided on. A committee in correspondence with a number of speakers of state reputation to orate on the day in question.

It is true, as I am credibly informed, that certain M. D.'s have in-moed patients who have come here to be treated, to go to Detroit, thus depriving the students of witnessing those clinics, it is high time the matter was brought to the attention of the board of regents. They have but one duty to perform, and that is to thoroughly investigate the truth or falsity of such reports, and if found to be true make an example of the guilty parties. There should be no more "whitewashing" on the part of the regents.

Citizens must not think because a few men were intoxicated on the streets Sunday, that the saloons were open. I believe that the law was never more rigidly enforced. Of course those who drink cannot be prevented from purchasing a trial night before, and they have no one to blame but themselves if they are run in by the police, as was that tailor Sunday. It was thought by some at first, it being his fourth or fifth offense, that he would land in the Detroit work house, but he begged so piteously, and made so many promises, that the justice concluded to overlook his indiscretion just once more, and with a fine of $1.50 and a little good advice he was permitted to depart.

Tuesday evening there was a party of four on Broadway hill, fifth ward, composed of two girls and their escorts. Their language was simply disgusting, which was interspersed with loud laughing and shouting. They repeated disgustingly vulgar stories in voices that could be plainly heard half a block away, much to the disgust of the residents who were compelled to listen to their talk. They answered to the names of M. and S. J. and S. Hair Matresses, Feather Beds, and Pillows made to order on short notice. Will always guaranteed, at KOCHE & HALLER'S.

Death of William Diehl. The following account of the murder is given to us by a Democrat by A. E. Clark, an old partner of Diehl, and a comrade in the G. A. R. We give Mr. Clark's own story.

About 3 o'clock last Friday, Wm. Diehl and his partner, John Schanland, were eating dinner in their cabin in Banker Hill Mining District. After they had finished, Diehl said to his partner: "I am going to chop down a tree over here, about 135 yards from the cabin." He went to his work, and a few minutes afterwards Schanland went out of the cabin, sat on the ground, and called out to his partner to pair his nails. All at once he heard a volley fired from a deep ravine, about 15 yards from where Diehl was working.

Schanland jumped toward Diehl, and heard him say, "My God!" Schanland rushed into the house and grabbed his rifle. He came out immediately and saw four Indians going towards Diehl's body. Mr. S. turned toward the foremost Indian, who reeled and jumped behind a tree. The Indians then commenced firing on Schanland, who retired to the cabin and returned the fire through the canvas door. While a portion of the Indians thus engaged the attention of Mr. Schanland, two of the philanthropic breeders crept up behind the cabin and attempted to set it on fire, but was kept at bay by two good dogs.

After Mr. Schanland had fought the Indians about two hours, firing only when necessary, as he was short of ammunition, a party of Indians made their appearance on a knoll of 200 yards from the cabin and commenced calling to those engaged in the fight. This called a lull in the firing, and a few minutes after the Indians all left, taking a southerly direction. Shortly after the Indians left, Mr. Schanland went out where he had seen his partner fall, hoping that he might be alive. But the old veteran was dead—two bullets through his stomach and one through his head. Mr. S. returned from a party of canvass and covered the body of his late friend companion. He then mounted his horse and took a half mile to the cabin, and returned to the circle of about twenty natives in the central portion of the San Pedro river, where he arrived about two o'clock the next morning. At daylight a party of ten men left Crowley's ranch for the scene of the murder.

The deceased, at the time of his death, was employed in building a corral for James Crowley, in Bunker Mining district, about 15 miles out of the Mammoth mine. He was well known in Southern Arizona as a miner and prospector, and was formerly a partner of E. A. Clark—Tombstone Prospector.

Michigan's Wool Clip. The following statement, showing the number of sheep and pounds of wool sheared in the state in 1886, and the number of sheep now on hand, is from farm statistics as returned this spring by the supervisors of 1,046 townships, and carefully prepared estimates from the remaining townships in the state. Of the townships from which supervisors' reports have been received only seventeen are in the southern four tiers of counties, and twenty in the central counties. The number of sheep sheared in the state in 1886, was 2,132,960, and the number of pounds of wool 12,386,204, an average per head of 5.81 pounds. The number of sheep on hand this spring is 2,004,749; at same average per head as in 1886, the wool clip of the present year will amount to 11,947,070 pounds. The number of sheep sheared in the southern counties in 1886 was 195,732, and pounds of wool 1,195,501, an average per head of 5.62 pounds; the number of sheep sheared in the central counties 1,581,448, pounds of wool 8,856,556, an average per head of 5.61 pounds; number of sheep sheared in the northern counties 17,779, pounds of wool 104,447, average per head 5.86 pounds. Each report since 1884, compared with the preceding report, shows a decrease in the number of sheep in the state. The loss from 1884 to 1885 was 89,819; from 1885 to 1886 it was 232,086, and the number now on hand is 128,265 less than in 1886.

Shortly after the Indians left, Mr. Schanland went out where he had seen his partner fall, hoping that he might be alive. But the old veteran was dead—two bullets through his stomach and one through his head. Mr. S. returned from a party of canvass and covered the body of his late friend companion. He then mounted his horse and took a half mile to the cabin, and returned to the circle of about twenty natives in the central portion of the San Pedro river, where he arrived about two o'clock the next morning. At daylight a party of ten men left Crowley's ranch for the scene of the murder.

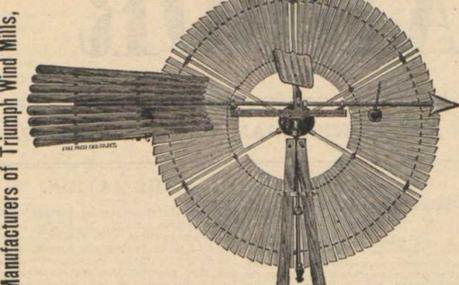

The deceased, at the time of his death, was employed in building a corral for James Crowley, in Bunker Mining district, about 15 miles out of the Mammoth mine. He was well known in Southern Arizona as a miner and prospector, and was formerly a partner of E. A. Clark—Tombstone Prospector.

Michigan's Wool Clip. The following statement, showing the number of sheep and pounds of wool sheared in the state in 1886, and the number of sheep now on hand, is from farm statistics as returned this spring by the supervisors of 1,046 townships, and carefully prepared estimates from the remaining townships in the state. Of the townships from which supervisors' reports have been received only seventeen are in the southern four tiers of counties, and twenty in the central counties. The number of sheep sheared in the state in 1886, was 2,132,960, and the number of pounds of wool 12,386,204, an average per head of 5.81 pounds. The number of sheep on hand this spring is 2,004,749; at same average per head as in 1886, the wool clip of the present year will amount to 11,947,070 pounds. The number of sheep sheared in the southern counties in 1886 was 195,732, and pounds of wool 1,195,501, an average per head of 5.62 pounds; the number of sheep sheared in the central counties 1,581,448, pounds of wool 8,856,556, an average per head of 5.61 pounds; number of sheep sheared in the northern counties 17,779, pounds of wool 104,447, average per head 5.86 pounds. Each report since 1884, compared with the preceding report, shows a decrease in the number of sheep in the state. The loss from 1884 to 1885 was 89,819; from 1885 to 1886 it was 232,086, and the number now on hand is 128,265 less than in 1886.

ABOUT THE WASP.

Some of Its Distinguishing Characteristics.

A majority think unkindly of the wasp. They cannot forget its sting. The prejudice is not an admirable one, as some prejudices are; race prejudice, for instance, which is the making of nations. But not this one against wasps. For it is really only a protest against a vigorous personality, against the assertion of individual power. In the human species there are wasps—strong-flighted men, whom most fear, and many, out of our sheer weakness, hate, for their robustness of mind and their intellectual aggressiveness. Such do not work in wax, nor store honey. Yet the workmanship of bees, as compared with that of wasps, is the workmanship of blind mutes imitating a pattern by touch of fingers as compared with that of uncrippled and independent intellect. The life history of the wasp, too, is far more worthy of self than the hive folk. Sting? Of course they do, if necessarily armed, and often, grateful to Providence for the weapon, they make the necessity for themselves. Ought they to keep their talents wrapped in napkins? No one likes bees better than I do. I have kept hives. But, after all, they are not the cattle and poultry of the insects? They are the sheep, while the wasps are the wild deer. The one represents routine, the other one protests against routine. What poetry is there in the lives of bees as compared with that of wasps?—in the tame citizenry of the artificial hive, the machine-made honey comb, as compared with the romance of the woodland comb-maker? Both bee and wasp need honey; but the latter, when he has not the leisure (or the will) to gather it for himself, goes after the former. "What, ho, there!" it cries. "You bumbling fellow, in your jerkin of woolly bonnet, stand and deliver!"—and the bee does. A pirate of the air? a highwayman of sky roads and heaths? No, no; not at all. This is the way of courageous genius, that knows how to take the bricks which the diligent mechanical student has been piling up into irregular heaps in his brick-yard, and to build beautiful houses with them. Left alone, they would have been piles of bricks, and nothing more, forever and a day. But a better man comes along and bravely possesses himself of them. "You can go and rummage for more," he says to the toiler among the clay; that is your life-work—to make bricks. Mine is to build with the bricks which you make." Of course, the bee buzzes and says: "You mustn't; you really ought not. I want the honey myself to fill a cell with." The wasp replies: "Deliver, or you are a dead bee." Or suppose they argue more calmly: "What are you doing?" demands the wasp. "Going home with my honey-bag," replies the other. "What for?" "To fill a cell with." "Well, what then?" When the cell is filled what shall you do?" "Shut it up and begin another." "Fill that up, too, and begin another." "Imagine the generous fury of the wasp!" "Oh, thou mustn't-headed fly! And is that the end of life—to fill cells with honey and eat none? To sweat all the summer through and have no harvest of your toil? O thou gross one! Thou honey-grubber! Thou miser of honey-bags! Perpetually filling for others to void—and without the wit to see that thou art the sport of spendthrifts. Out of this! Give up your honey, or I shall rid the world of a numskull variety." But, like the sturdy good citizen that he is, the bee often refuses to surrender, and then was to him, the poor honest fellow in his fustian coat. For my gentleman whips out his bodkin, and there is an end of the bee. In short, there is a great deal to say about the wasp, and in its favor. Its soldierly ways, so "smart" and alert—the lancer in the field, a gladiator at need. When they go abroad it is with military motions—scouting, skirmishing, foraging, fighting. And the nest is a citadel. There is no "bumbling" variety of the wasp, no "bumble" wasp. They make very little fuss about what they do. Yet sometimes, when they go there, is slung past your ear a sound like a rifle-bullet; not like the bees of "a full content," but an eager racing voice that has an objective point before it. Thus they keep life from getting stagnant. Many insects would go to sleep altogether if it were not for the wasps, who are forever reconnoitering other people's premises. Just as nature keeps a hawk hung up in the air to teach the groundlings that "life is not all beer and skittles," so she always has a wasp on hand to repress the idea of perpetual gaiety among insects. It is the falcon of the dipterous folk. So, when it is not at work, there is a delightful idleness about the wasp; a thorough complete vacancy which is enough to send a honey-bee mad to see. But for myself I hold perpetual labor in abomination, and believe my hatred of it just.—St. James's Gazette.

The Old Sleigh.

"Elizabeth!"

"Coming."

"There, mother, old Speckle has returned thanks at last," holding up a plump, white egg that would do credit to any queen of the poultry yard.

"Well, I allers said that hen was thankful for past mercies, though your father would laugh every time I said so. Liddy Steven has just been here; she wanted to see you, but you was gone so long I thought you must be down to Miss Pommel's."

"Yes, I met her as she came through the yard."

"She didn't tell you the news, did she?"

"She told me Will Marston had returned from California."

"It does beat all 'bout that boy—seems just like the piece of poetry you read sometimes about the feller that went off and stayed so many years and then come back and took his mother out of 'em the poor-house—only it's the father this time. 'The very worst of the deacon's six,' it called him, and that's just what Will was then. I never believed he had anything to do with that scrape down to the village. Liddy says he's terribly rich, and is going to take care of his father; the deacon must be glad, for I guess he's stayed with Caleb most as long as he can comfortably. They say he's going to marry Sam Miller's daughter Ruth. You see when Bob Miller went out there for his health Will found him out and done little kindnesses for him, and when he was to pick to write home Will wrote for him. Part of the time Sam will scribble. So Ruth answered the letters, and he fell in love with her in that way. They did not anybody but the deacon and the Millers knew he was coming. Sam drove down to the depot and carried him up to Caleb's. Guess they was surprised to see him."

"There is no knowing how long Mrs. Allen would have gone on, her tongue keeping time to the busy click-clack of her needles, had not Mr. Allen's step, sounded on the walk.

"Elizabeth never talked much, and the mother did not mind her silence to-night. A slight quiver about the sensitive mouth alone told how keenly the words were felt, and the sigh of relief which escaped at the welcome sound of her father's voice was lost in the noise made as he entered, stamping the snow from his boots.

"Why, father, does it snow? I been so busy talking I hadn't thought to look out of the window for some time."

"Yes, it's begun to come down right smart; shouldn't wonder if it was good sleighing to-morrow."

"You don't think it's going to be a long storm?"

Mrs. Allen's face had an anxious expression as she asked the question, for a long storm meant days of exile for her.

"No, I sh'ld be surprised if it don't clear up by to-morrow noon—so's 'Lizabeth and I can take a ride to the village; that'll be a treat, won't it darter?" and the smile that lighted up his daughter's face pleased him better than any answer could have done.

"Guess I'll get the old sleigh out. Ben Smart's ben down to the city, and he says he saw lots just like it; it's five years since I sent Jim to the village for the new one, and it's never been out since. I'm glad it's coming into fashion again, for I never enjoyed myself complete in the new one—always felt a little above my station," and Farmer Allen's laugh rang through the sitting-room at the fitness of his remark.

"Well, 'Lizabeth, you get supper on the table, and I'll tell father the news while he warms his feet. He's ben down to the wood lot all the afternoon and hasn't heard nothing of the strange things that has been happening up here."

Having arranged things to her satisfaction, the stocking Mrs. Allen had dropped on the entrance of her husband continued to grow under her deft fingers, while the news lost none of its interest with repetition.

"That night, after 'Lizabeth had taken her candle and said good night, Mr. Allen sat for some time looking at the fire, then suddenly broke out:

"Mother, don't you think 'Lizabeth looks kind o' peaked lately? There she don't seem to eat as usual."

"There, father, you're always fretting 'bout that girl. I don't know what you'd do if you'd had six like your brother Jonathan."

"I didn't know but the news about Will might affect her some. You know they used to think so much of each other."

"Massy, father! that was years and years ago, when they were children. 'Lizabeth's too sensible a girl to let a feller like Will Marston disturb her. When he stopped writing to her, she gave him up. She's worked hard to-day, and a good night's rest will bring her round."

"There seemed nothing more to be said, so he took a light and proceeded to make everything safe for the night, but long after his good wife was asleep, he lay awake thinking of the pale face his daughter had lifted for the good-again."

"Lizabeth was not likely to get the strength her mother thought from a night's rest. Until the first rays of morning lighted up the east she lay thinking of the old days, and living them over again. She could not remember the time when she and Will had not seemed to belong to each other. When they were children he had drawn her to and from school on his sled, saved her the largest half of his apple or orange, and fought all his battles with a vigor worthy of an old knight. When the years in their flight made them no longer children, it was always Will who, at the close of meeting or singing-school, drew her arm through his with an air of proprietorship and started for the Allen farm. After his mother's death he had not chosen his associates wisely, but in spite of scorn and opposition, without disobedience, she had clung to him and tried.

"She could distinguish them. Speaking of Mrs. Robinson and Mrs. Jones," remarked Fangle "they resemble very much."

"Yes, they look a good deal alike," assented Mrs. Fangle.

"I fact, I can't tell them apart; but I suppose you can, my dear?"

"Well, I should just think I could! Why Mrs. Jones' bonnet cost four times as much as Mrs. Robinson's."

Attention Asked for Dr. A. M. Spaulding's Rheumatic Syrup Co.

Gentlemen—I am pre-eriting Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup in my practice, and un-derstand that it is the most effective remedy which you claim it is good for. It is truly remarkable in its effects, and I have procured a lot of it, and to be used in the most judicious manner.

It is a great tonic and appetizer, and it is a great relief to the sufferer from a diseased stomach or a dyspeptic person. It has no equal, and should have the approval of the medical faculty. Your Rheumatic plasters are the best I have ever used, and should be worn over the chest by all afflicted with weak lungs, or pains in their chest and stomach.

Very truly, Dr. A. M. Spaulding, 119 Canal Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Read the Statement of Rev. Jas. Berry, Rhetorician by the Co.

Last winter and spring I was a terrible sufferer from rheumatism in my left arm and shoulder, and most excruciating pain. I used several highly recommended remedies, but continued to suffer, until I procured a bottle of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, which I used according to the directions, and lo! it cured me. I can boast of a romance like that—Portland Transcript.

Very truly yours, W. H. J. Berry, Rev. Geo. W. Berry, Dec. 8, 1888.
