

OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

He Sees About Everything and Prints About Everything He Sees.

If county and city officials will set the example, they should not complain because men and boys will romp over the court yard lawn.

In my perambulations, I notice that many property owners have either repaired or laid new sidewalks, and the good work should go on until the city can lay claim to having the best walks of any place in its size in the state.

In some portions of the city, particularly in the eastern part of the fourth and sixth wards, there seems to be very little force from the water works, and property owners complain when attempting to water their lawns.

Ten dollars, it seems to me is a pretty big price to pay for watering the court yard lawn, and yet this is the amount allowed at the recent meeting of the council.

I heard someone say that the citizens' committee had issued a pamphlet relating to Ann Arbor, but I venture the assertion that not one in 500 has seen one of the wonderful books.

Those persons who persist in trotting horses over the fifth ward bridge adjoining Swift & Co's mill, in violation of law, deserve to be summarily dealt with, and I think if an example was made of one or two, others would be more careful about driving faster than a walk.

I often wonder if it will be the good luck of the residents of the third ward living west of Allen's creek, to live to see the day when the old dilapidated coal If the present board of aldermen had the sand they would order the sheds down instanter.

The incessant whistling of the switch engine on the Toledo road, between High and Liberty streets, at all hours of the night, has become an intolerable nuisance, and it is to be hoped that the city fathers will appreciate the efforts of the city fathers.

In my walks around town, I notice that a number of corners, where the electric lights are, that the small boys congregate and try to see if they can hit the glass globe which is over the light, by throwing stones.

Residents of Ingalls street are tormented almost to death by cows running at large. They graze on the lawns, run through gardens, and trample down grass, just as if there was no ordinance preventing cattle and horses from running at large.

The attention of the board of health, I understand, has been called time and again to a nuisance in the rear of the clothing store of Blitts & Langford, and why it has not been abated ere this is a puzzle.

During the coming season I am informed that theater-goers are to be treated to a large number of first-class entertainments. Already many attractions have been booked, and the list is increasing with each succeeding week.

I confess I was disgusted at the conduct of certain parties the night the street preacher was talking on the corner of Ann and Main streets.

I notice that a good many citizens retain their boxes in the postoffice. They probably prefer to do this until the free delivery system is perfected, when it is safe to say it is a new thing, and it takes time to arrange it, but I doubt if there is any city in the state, or any other state, with the delivery only two weeks old, where a better record can be shown, than has been made here.

It is bad enough in all conscience to see men reeling with intoxication on the streets, but it certainly looks worse to see a woman in this condition.

In strange contrast with the horse watering trough on Huron street, is the arrangement at the foot of State street. Here either a horse or double team can quench their thirst without being obliged to climb an elevation.

When the free delivery system was established, postmaster Duffy was anxious to cover as much territory as possible, and for several days the carriers nearly walked themselves to death.

The drinking trough for horses is still the matter of much unfavorable comment, and people wonder why it was placed in one of the principal business streets, and in front of the finest building in the city.

I see by a Detroit paper that a large force of men have commenced work on the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Cadillac railroad at Farwell, and that it will be pushed to the Muekegon river with all possible dispatch.
