Will Price, book-keeper of the first National bank, has a heart as tender as a woman's, as evinced by the care and extra best attention on the work of his family horse, once a fine roadster, but now old age has shorn him of his strength. At Will's expense he roams a farm pasture in the summer, and is carefully housed in the winter.
Father Considine of Chelsea, is organizing in his parish, Father Matthew temperance societies. The latest one being formed at Pinckney with ninety members to start with. The Catholic priest at Pleasant is also one of the foremost temperance men in that part of the state, and to his efforts more than to anyone else is attributed the success of prohibition in that county.
To attempt to review the play would be folly. She alone can tell the simple story. Like the holy legends of the olden time, the story, with its pure moral, will cease to be told—for profane lips must not dare it—when the first teller tires of relating it. The story, its scenes and characters are only what this little being the center-piece of the framework, makes real. She is its soul, its heart, its life, its Fanchon and Maggie Mitchell must ever remain one and inseparable. In their wedlock is the narrative's strength.—Louvaine (Ex) Journal.
A true comedian is one who effects in his acting the peculiarities of an individual or individuals, nearly all comedians fail in doing this, for the reason that to gain the applause and approval of the hour, they are willing to sacrifice their reputation as artists and become vulgar caricaturists. Mr. Chas. Erin Vermer now playing the star role in "Shamus O'Brien" is such a comedian, he claims to represent Irish habits and personal peculiarities to delineate Irish love and hate in a perfectly truthful and life-like manner, and in this he has been entirely successful. His play "Shamus O'Brien" is a powerful version of the famous poem of that name. It is a story of Irish love and hate, and Mr. Vermer's impersonation is a comedy of original and pre-eminently strong. His "Shamus O'Brien" is a perfect specimen of many beauties, his singing, dancing and acting are true to life. His faculty for causing laughter is only equaled by his ability for melting an audience into tears, and when one has witnessed his truly wonderful impersonation, they are constrained to say: "Where he not the greatest comedian, he would be the greatest emotional actor on the stage." At the Grand this evening.
The January number, 1888, of "Peterson's Magazine" is at hand this early in the month. The opening number for the new year is a decided success. It has two handsome steel engravings. One, "Among the Roses," is a beautiful plate, illustrating an interesting story by Frank Lee Bennett. The other is called "The Young Cricketer," and will go right to the heart of every boy who loves a game of ball. There is also an elegant design printed in colors, for a stripe for chair, etc., in Berlin-wool, besides numerous illustrations of dresses and workable patterns. Miss M. G. McClelland, who has lately taken a front rank among young Southern writers, begins a serial in her most intense dramatic vein; and there are, besides, a goodly number of short tales by writers of first-class reputation, and poems far above the average of magazine literature. Between its literary claims, its artistic excellence, and its thorough reliability as a guide to taste and fashion, "Peterson's" covers a wide range, but in no respect is there ever any failure. We never fail to recommend it most heartily to our lady friends. The exquisite premiums offered, this year, make it better than ever worth any lady's while to get up a club. Terms: Two Dollars a year, with great reductions to clubs, and elegant premiums to those getting up clubs. Sample-copies, free, to those desiring to get up a club. Address Peterson's Magazine, 303 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Maggie Mitchell who appeared as Fanchon before a delighted audience in the Academy on Friday evening is perhaps the most popular actress of the day. To this popularity three things have contributed: her amiable disposition, her excellent ability and the many years in which she has contributed to the amusement of the people.—Ohio Republican.
Rev. J. M. McGrath of St. Paul's church, Lansing, has announced that he would read no more notices from the chance, but that all such would be posted on a bulletin board at the door. This might have a good effect in some churches where the congregation is usually late, as it would require the people earlier to church to read these notices. Mr. McGrath is also opposed to the ringing of church bells. We agree with the reverend gentleman and think this relic of a past age should be done away with.

The Michigan state agricultural college has declared against the sparrow as an unmitigated nuisance. The increase of these birds since their introduction in 1838 is almost incredible. It advocates killing them off in every possible manner and recommends netting, trapping, shooting and even poison, if where it can be used without danger to other creatures. Free Press. These miserable little pests are driving away all of our native song birds, as well as doing all kinds of mischief.
Everybody's favorite, Maggie Mitchell began her annual engagement at Masonic hall's last night before a crowded house in her widely known and ever popular play Fanchon, the Cricketer. Fanchon, to the theatre-goers, has never been associated among their fond-st and purest stage recollections, and Maggie Mitchell must always go with the recollections. In her hands the play becomes a sweet pastoral hymn, accompanied by the very heart-strings. The fragrance of the innocent peasant life is wafted around a touching story told by this artist in accents of mingled mirth and sadness. Maggie Mitchell has not changed. She is the same memory's dear Maggie Mitchell that she has always been. Not that she has become synonymous, on the contrary, she is looked for each successive season just as the season's first, purest and freshest flowers—never tiring of their aroma, their brightness. At the grand Dec. 21.
