In this instance our correspondent has chosen a becoming signature behind which to screen his identity. He is rattled and no mistake about it either. But perhaps the chief cause of his condition is a willful neglect to recognize the real functions of money before he launched out upon a discus sion of the comparative merits of the materials of which money is made. One of the most important requisites of money is stability. The material which is made by law the legal standard of value and unit of account should be subject to as slight fluctuations as possible. For this reason gold and silver have for ages been devoted to Gradually the convocation even of a merely consultative assembly became less and less frequent. Finally its existence was altogether done away with. After 1682 no convocation took place any more except once under Catherine II., for a mere temporary object. Peter I., Cather-III., Catherine II., Paul I., Alexander I., III., all ruled on the strict autocratic principle which Nicholas II, is still bent upon continuing. Peter I., the Great, enlarged upon it by extending the liability to corporal punishment from the
