

POVERTY IN LONDON.

MRS. OKMISTON CHANT, OF LOS-DON, EKG., OF THIS SUBJECT.

She Protests against the Multi-millionaire Doctrine—Frightful Condition of the London Poor—The Unitarian Church Crowded to hear the Eloquent Lady.

The announcement through the city papers, that this noted lecturer was to speak last Sunday morning and evening at the Unitarian church, was sufficient to pack that edifice to suffocation, many not even being able to enter the church at all, while a large number remained standing in the vestibule and parlors.

"I am here tonight to discuss the religious and philanthropic work in London; I am here to tell you of the awful degree of poverty we have in the large cities of England, and to tell you how we are endeavoring to combat it. I want to protest against that political economy which says that poverty is necessary. Poverty we always have with us; and the great question is, What can we do to prevent it? The cry of distress is continually ringing in our ears, until we feel like putting our finger to our ears to keep the awful sound out.

"You are receiving the dregs of the poverty of Europe. Don't turn them away. Don't refuse them an asylum, a home; for oh! they need it so much. If you could go with me to London and see the thousands walking the streets, day and night, homeless, friendless, starving, you would not turn them back. I started out with a friend one morning before daylight for a walk, over the Thames bridge, a favorite sleeping place for London's poor, and there we saw 207 men and a number of women, sleeping out in the open air, in their helpless piteousness, grouped together in various positions, the head of one resting on the body of another, two or three here and there huddled together for mutual comfort, and occasionally would be seen the poor, wan upturned face of a helpless starving woman. Oh, it was a picture, a study for future artists. It was an awful sight, my friends, to see 207 of our brothers and sisters out there sleeping, or walking wearily up and down, the whole night long. It was enough to break my heart.

"Another night about two o'clock, accompanied by my husband, I was driving through the streets, and saw a young girl not more than 16 years old, carrying a little babe, slowly walking up and down, alone and unattended. I went up to her and asked if she had no home. With an oath she turned on me and demanded what business was it of mine whether she had or not. After some persuasion, she told me she must remain in the street till morning; that her husband had come home drunk, kicked her and her child out of doors, and so she must remain walking up and down till he saw fit to let her in the house again. I took her into my cab and drove to a coffee house, where for a small sum of money, I procured her some nourishment, and then bade her good bye. I could not get her to leave the drunken brute of a husband, but turning away, she said with a sigh, 'there's only one more hour to wait, then he'll let me in.' I tell you my friend, the price of the salvation of our fellows is our eternal vigilance. It is in these awful depths of misery and crime that we find our newspaper tragedies.

"If wages for men and women for the same work were alike, it would have a great tendency to decrease debauchery and crime, and to stop this awful struggle for existence. But the wages paid the working women of London are nothing. Six cents they receive for making a white shirt, and find their own thread and needles. But you say, why don't they strike? Yes, the men can strike and get higher wages, but let the poor women strike and it is taken away from them altogether, and given to others. The great curse of the sewing women is the middlemen or 'sweaters' as they are called; and no less than 13 of them share in the profits between the sewing women and the retailer. A woman, possibly with two or three children, makes a pair of trousers requiring four hours' work, for which she is to receive two pence. She takes them to a 'sweater,' under whose contract she is working and he looks them over, and finally finds fault with the button holes; they are not worked enough. He says 'you must be drilled—stand there!' She stands there hour after hour, for if she stirs she will lose her money. Think of it! She has perhaps left a little babe at home, which is perishing with hunger. Yet stand there she must. The next day she returns and stands in the same position till she has been sufficiently 'drilled' and the 'sweater' gives her her money.

"Oh, my friends, don't grow weary of the immigrant. If you could realize how they are crushed down by the poverty of foreign lands; how they long to reach the shores of free America, you would bid them welcome. You can help them, you can comfort them. But don't go about it in a patronizing way, for they have a right to kick you out if you do. Go about it as though you pitied them, and desired through sympathetic kindness, to better their condition and raise them to a higher, happier level."

TAPPA3T HALL'S COURSE.

Two Detroit Divines Outline what it is to Be.—Presbyterianism is to be Taught in Ann Arbor to the Students.

Last Thursday night, in the parlors of the Presbyterian church, Revs. Dr. Radcliffe and Dr. Dikie, of Detroit, held their promised conference with the students and members of the Tappan association, concerning the future work of that society.

Dr. Radcliffe began by saying that the meeting was held for the purpose of interesting the students of the University, and especially those of Presbyterian tendencies in church work. It had been decided to inaugurate a series of lectures, to begin sometime in November, devoted to a study of the creeds and doctrines of the Presbyterian church, how to become successful Sunday-school teachers, how to study the Bible intelligently, and the study of some particular subjects in the Bible would probably be taken up.

These lectures would be free to all who chose to come, and would be held once a week, taking probably an hour's time, and would be conducted by those connected with the church in Detroit.

"This work will be simply a preliminary one, as we intend, as soon as possible, to make Tappan hall a reality, and have our lecture room, and our reading room, and make it a home for Presbyterians. A course of religious study will be established, after finishing which the student will be entitled to admission to a theological seminary. But this is in the future, and for the present we must engage in the work of building up Presbyterianism, and inducing the young people to join us."

Dr. Dikie expressed about the same views, and the opinion of the forty or fifty present was to the effect that such a course of lectures or talks would be very beneficial.

THE U. OF M. MINSTRELS.

The Gyni. gets a Lift, and the Citizens of Ann Arbor a Treat.

Last Friday night the opera house was crowded by a large and fashionable audience to hear the U. of M. minstrels. About $450 were taken in. It was probably the first minstrel show that scores of ladies in the audience had ever seen.

The boys well deserved the hearty applause they received. There was a dearth of bone and tambo work, but in jokes, singing, funny business, and comicities, the entertainment was a great success. Sam Ireland and Frank McDonell as the chief end men displayed surprising talent. The other end men, Billy Griffin, Ted Smith, Jim Duffy, Hank Brown, Roy Farrant, and Sam Park did their work well.

Mr. Duffy's topical song, "Why certainly," and Mr. Brown's "In 1909," were full of local hit? of the richest kind which brought the house down several times. In the end men's clashes of wit, the boys used one old device dear to negro minstrel men, which is the bet on which one can tell the biggest lie. McDonell and Smith told pretty large ones; but, as is always the way, the last man told the largest. Ireland began his, and he had got no farther than saying that he was eating some strawberry short-cake at his boarding house the other day, when the stakes were promptly handed to him, it being considered highly improbable that an Ann Arbor boarding house ever furnished any such luxury. The audience saw the point, and enjoyed it, and the landladies will not be offended at the boys' jokes.

DTE. Ewald's fine voice sounded excellently well in "Out on the deep," and S. H. Crowl won hearty applause by singing "Drifting in the moonlight down the bay." S. K. Pittman sang "They all love Jack," and Messrs. Crowl, Waggoner, Cole, Carpenter, Pittman, Ewald, Vantine, Wiseman and Pennington, of the Glee Club, sang "Soldier's Joy."

V Of course the pronouncing contest and Loisette memory scheme had to be taken down, which was done in "Prof. Bluebood's pronouncing contest." Messrs. Harkins and Granger did some very clever clog dancing. Fred McOmber and Earnest Parry were recalled after their eccentric musical spasm. Sam Ireland again displayed his choice wit. As was announced, he made a "gash" in the program. R. W. Griswold, W. C. Hebard, J. B. Miller, and W. H. Muir, with their banjos and guitars, made most excellent effect with popular melodies. Ireland and McDonnell appeared as Irishmen. Harkins and Granger did some dancing, singing and funny business, and then came "Amaryllis, or the tale of two Donkeys," a one act pastoral (?) said to have been written by McAndrews, a former lit. now of Hyde Park, Ills. It is a clever thing and was well put on. The chief hit was made by R. T. Farrant, who as Amaryllis, the daughter of Chlorophyll, was made up like a modern ballet girl, and who carried his part out to perfection, bewitching the bald heads and tender youths on the front rows with all the ease of the real dancing girl. Farrant is something of an athlete, and hence displayed more muscle than is popularly supposed to be usual; but it was a great success nevertheless. L. C. Boyle and C. T. Alexander, who will be remembered as leading actors in the M... of the D... were prominent in the pastoral; Alexander, as "Sillycus, a poet," doing some very good work in mocking Irvice and other actors. E. H. Smith was "Wordycus, a philosopher," J. E. Duffy was the Roman emperor, and F. L. Smith was "Exercitus, the donkey."

The Facts of the Case.

The terrible, blood curdling stories that were circulated on the streets Tuesday, to the effect that anywhere from one to half a dozen students had been killed the night before in a drunken row, turns out as was expected, to be simply the creation of vivid imagination, which had for a basis for the stories told the following facts: It was known that Monday night a party of students were having a high old time about midnight on Main st., near the post-office. The next morning a trail of blood was seen beginning near the post-office and leading to Goodyear's drug store, where it was evident, from the quantity on the walk, there, that some one had tried to get in, and being unsuccessful, had gone on up Main-st, Word being plainly visible to the corner of Main and Liberty-sts, where it disappeared. This fact set all sorts of rumors afloat, and it was affirmed by some that a student was killed on the spot; by others that he bled to death, by some that he had been stabbed, and by others that his skull had been crushed by a champagne bottle in the hands of one of his companions.

The following are the facts in the case: A party of students had been indulging in some intoxicants and as a consequence became hilarious. They broke several champagne bottles on the street, and in doing this one threw the upper part of a broken bottle in such a way as to strike another student on the inside of the foot cutting an artery. The whole posse then made their way to Dr. Kapp's office, S. Main st., and routing that gentleman out of bed, he sewed up the wound. The doctor says the boys all seemed good-natured, and there were no indications of any ill feeling between them. The student was a lit, and was in his classes Wednesday.

A Great Day.

Saturday is to be children's day. Major Soule, assisted by the teachers and others, will act as communder-in-chief. The hall will be handsomely decorated under the able supervision of Messrs. Morgan, Randall and others. Judge Harriman will act as president of the day, and Prof. Renwick as musical director. The exercises at the hall will begin at 2 o'clock. Short addresses will be made by President Angel and Dr. Earp. The city band will furnish the music during the parade, and the Chequamegon orchestra will perform a like service at the hall. All children of the city are expected to join the procession whether they attend school or not.

PROGRAM FOR PROCESSION.

The court house bell will ring at one o'clock p. m., at which time all the children of the different wards should be assembled at their respective schools.

The sixth ward school, with the marshal and City band at the head, will leave their grounds at 1:15 p. m., and passing through the University campus by the diagonal way to Sheehan's corner, join the first ward school, which will form behind them, going north on Statest, they will pass the high school where the procession will be joined by the eighth grade pupils, who will form in the rear of the first ward.

Thence the procession will go north to Boweryst, then west to Division where it will be joined by the fourth ward, St. Thomas' and fifth ward schools in the order in which they are named. The procession will then move south on Division-st to Ann, west on Ann-st to Fifth, where the second and third ward schools will form in the rear of the second division, in the order named.

From this point on the procession will be complete. The line will now move south on Fifth-st to Huron, then west on Huron to Fourth, north on Fourth to Ann, west on Ann-st to Main, south on Main to Liberty, east on Liberty to Division, south on Division to Jefferson, east on Jefferson to State, north on State to main entrance to the University Hall.

Each ward and school are expected to be prompt in joining the procession, so that there may be no delay.

The first ward and eighth grade should time the starting in reference to the sixth ward. The fifth ward, headed by the Huron band, should start at 1:30, go up Broadway and Detroitists to Division, up Division and form behind the St. Thomas school, which should start at 1:45.

The second ward should leave their grounds at 1:20 go north to Liberty, on Liberty to second-st, north on second to Catharine, here the third ward, which has started at 1:30, will form behind. The two wards will then move east on Catharine to Fifth, then south on Fifth to Ann where they will join the main procession.

The Huron band will have a position in the rear of the fourth ward.

The line of march has been planned with a due consideration to the comfort of the children. Everything possible will be done to make this day one of the most pleasant of their lives.

It is suggested that citizens, along the route of the procession, decorate their residences and places of business, and in that way contribute to the pleasures of the day.

Those who have teams and vehicles in the city, Saturday afternoon, are respectfully requested to keep them off the streets, over which the line of march extends, at the time the procession is passing.

Luther James' Assessment Raised.

The most important work of the board of review, last week, was the raising of some assessments that heretofore have been notoriously low. Luther James, of this city, who has always claimed Lima as his residence, and has paid taxes on $30,000 or $40,000, was made a resident of Ann Arbor, and his taxable property put at $194,000, as the records show. Reuben Kempf was down for $214,000, but he claimed that $81,000 was in mortgages that had been paid, and not discharged, or where the property had been taken in payment, and deeds given. He claimed further that $75,000 belonged to the banking firm of Kempf Bros., Chelsea. He was assessed at $120,000. Wm. Wagner was put up to $60,000.

Last Saturday evening the Shakespeare club was sumptuously entertained at the home of Miss Luella Bush, of Ann Arbor township. The members assembled at 4 p. m., and after two hours of intellectual feast upon the works of the immortal poet, all sat down to an elegant repast. Toasts were responded to by Messrs. Bell, Gale, and Kstzenberger, of the U. of M. The evening was pleasantly spent in rendition of scenes from Shakespeare and dancing. The members reluctantly disbanded for the season and were profuse in their thanks to their hostess for the elegant manner in which they had been entertained. The club terminates the second year of its existence and the success which has attended its meeting has been most satisfactory.

Adjourned to meet on evening of June 20.

Washtenaw Pomology.

At the meeting last Saturday, Prof. B. E. Nichols, chairman of the committee, which has done such good work for the society, saving for the fruit-growers last year, from 500 to 600 dollars on transportation, gave a full report of his work so far, so that shippers will also have cheap transportation of berries if at least fifty bushels are shipped per day. Some fruit-growers who never bear any burden of the society, neither in money nor time, who, however, are always ready to take advantage of the hard work of their fellows, have even neglected to pay their last year's tax of one cent per bushel, which the active members paid cheerfully long ago to Prof. Nichol.

Mr. Granzhorn reported that the fruit exchange of South Haven is incorporated. The directors have appointed a fruit inspector who attends to the shipping and distribution of fruit and rejects inferior fruit and measures. This exchange has saved to the fruit men last year $1.50 per barrel on apples alone.

J. D. Baldwin: We should in time make arrangements for shipping peaches in refrigerator cars, especially at the ripening of Crawford peaches and Bartlett pears.

E. Baur: The berry business should not be overlooked. Last year strawberries did not pay because large growers flooded the market here and full quart baskets had to compete with smaller baskets at the same price. EMIL BAUR, Cor. Secy.

A JOINT MEETING.

Two Fanners' Clubs have a Profitable Session at E. D. Watklus' Home.

The joint meeting of the Southern Washtenaw and the Norvell Farmer clubs, met at the home of L. D. Wa'kinp, known as "Fair View Farm," June 1. Among the invited guests present were C. M. Starks, of the Webster club, and Smith, Kelly, and Flint, of the Columbia club. Fully 100 had gathered before noon, and were having a very social time, when dinner was announced. Although the company was large, the provision was abundant, and more than 12 baskets of fragments might have been gathered up. After all had been supplied, the company repaired to the lawn, where seats had been prepared for the literary exercises, which consisted of two essays and two papers.

Mr. Halliday, president of the Norvell club, presided.

Mrs. R. D. Palmer, of Norvell, read a paper upon the subject, "Home." She said a good one need not be of architectural beauty or grandeur, but where kindred spirit united by love, dwelt. The essay was a good one.

Miss Nettie English, of Manchester, next read an essay, subject, "Modern Conversation." Some specimens were given, and some quotations read which were very amusing.

A. R. Palmer, of Norvell, and C. M. Fellows, of Sharon, each read papers on topic announced for discussion, "What constitutes a practical education for farmers' sons and daughters." Both papers recommended a good general education, a knowledge of civil government, history and the sciences, as well as a knowledge of farm work. The discussion which followed was very interesting.

D. W. Palmer, an early settler of Bridge-water, who, in his early days, had a good deal of experience in teaching and training children, gave a short account of his work; thought moral training should not be lost sight of in the training of the intellect. This was essential to a complete education. Rev. J. W. Patchin, C. M. Starks, and others, gave some good thoughts on education. Thus passed a very profitable meeting which, with the hospitality of L. D. Watkins, and family, will long be remembered.

Dr. Mmth's Barn Burnt.

Monday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, the large barns on the farm of Dr. W. B. Smith, about two miles out on the river road, were destroyed by fire, with all their contents excepting a few agricultural implements. M. M. Green drove by the place to the next farm, and says he was not gone 15 minutes, and there was no fire on the place that he saw, but on returning the flames were just bursting through the roof, in the center of the barn. When Mr. Green drove up a hired man who lives in the house, was there endeavoring get out some of the tools in the barn. He told Mr. Green that he was nearly a quarter of a mile from the barns when he saw the fire and had no idea how it caught. Tramps have of late been turned away from there, as they were becoming a nuisance, and had made threats to burn the barn, and probably some of them carried the threat into execution. Loss about $3500. Insured for $1500.

Literary Notes.

The American Magazine for June, contains some very brilliant articles. "Our Defenses from an Army Standpoint" by Gen. O. O. Howard, is the best. An article "The art of entertaining" by Mrs. John A. Logan, will prove instructive reading.

GENERAL SHERIDAN.

The Noted Warrior Is Seriously Ill at His Home in Washington.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—At 11 o'clock last evening there were no unfavorable symptoms in General Sheridan's case, and yet there was no encouraging improvement visible. During the day he received his commission as General of the Army. Words can not describe the pleasure the act brought to the brave soldier. His eyes were filled with tears as the commission was laid in his hands, and his heart overflowed with gratitude. He then appointed as aides on his staff, with the rank of Colonel: Major Michael V. Sheridan, Assistant Adjutant-General; Captain Stanford C. Kellogg, Fifth Cavalry, and Captain Stanhope E. Blunt, Ordnance Department.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—A change for the worse in the condition of General Sheridan was reported at a late hour last night.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—General Sheridan's condition was materially improved last night. He slept well and his mind was clear.

EIGHTEEN PERSONS KILLED.

Terrible Railroad Wreck in Mexico—Forty-One Injured.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 6.—A railway accident occurred Monday evening just outside of Tampico in which many lives were lost. A construction train was derailed near a bridge by a cow and a donkey, which were on the track. The train crashed through the bridge and went down an embankment. The dead and injured were brought in yesterday. So far as known eighteen persons were killed and forty-one injured.

Five Men Killed.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., June 6.—Captain Diggins, master of the fishing schooner Knight, and against whom Canadian officials have made charges of selling bait to the French, yesterday ran up the American flag and defied the officers. A large force of police finally affected his capture.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, June 2.—There were 186 business failures in the United States, during the seven days ended yesterday, against 213 the previous seven days. The total failures in the United States from January 1 to date is 4,551, against 4,514 in 1887.

ATLANTA, Ga., June 5.—Friday night Allen Stargess was pulled from under a lady's bed at Thompson—the lady having given an alarm in time—and he was locked up. Last night a mob broke into the jail and hanged the miscreant to a tree.

A Disastrous Failure.

CHICAGO, June 6.—The DeGolyer Vanish Company, one of the largest and oldest concerns in its line of business in this country, failed yesterday afternoon. The liabilities amount to fully $300,000, and the nominal assets to about the same amount.

Old Enough to Know Better.

CATLIX, Ill., June 2.—Thomas Polhemus, aged 80, was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary at hard labor for the attempted burglary of Woodbury's drug store at Danville, this State.

Death a Famous Minstrel.

The Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City road has decided to ignore the long and short haul clause of the Inter-State Commerce law.

A Few Economical Hints.

As so many wives have to economize in every department of their domain, perhaps it may benefit some to know one of their number has learned by actual experience that dumplings, for chickens or other stewed meats, are better when made of flour, a little salt and enough water to make a smooth dough, which should be rolled thin, cut in long strips, and broken (not cut), in pieces when put in the kettle, than the so called raised dumplings, in which egg and soda are used. Rivals for soup are just as good where made of only flour and water, as when made of flour and eggs. Enough flour should be used so the rivels will not stick together in sodden lumps, but in fine dry flakes or wafers.

A nice, healthful pudding for dessert may be made by putting a layer of stale bread into a saucepan, then a layer of fruit, sugar, more bread, fruit, etc., until the pan is full. Then add enough water to moisten all well, sprinkle sugar over top, which should be bread, and bake until done. The bread should be browned nicely. Serve with cream or rich milk.

Sweet corn (dried) is improved by adding twice as much sugar as salt used in cooking it. Tin-nips cooked in the same way are better than when boiled with meat. Parsnips boiled in water slightly salted, which is thickened with a gravy made of rich milk, with a little flour stirred in, when parsnips are tender, are excellent. I have had better success with pancakes made without eggs, using butter-milk and soda.—Farm and Fire'side.

Where Caution Is Needed.

"There is a great deal of carelessness nowadays in giving introductions," said a society leader to a reporter. "Formerly an introduction meant considerably more than it now does. It was not given lightly and almost as a matter of course to any applicant. Of late the formality of introduction has been much abused. There is no longer the same caution and discrimination in the matter.

"People will often unthinkingly introduce to their friends the merest casual acquaintances, of whose moral and social standing they know absolutely nothing, forgetting that by so doing they are pledging their own honor for their conduct. It is of course principally owing to the easy and matter of course fashion in which introductions are asked and obtained that adventurers and fortune hunters are able to secure a footing in good society so easily. If proper care were taken to see that those seeking introduction, were what they professed to be, the operations of these gentlemen would be rendered much more difficult."—New York Mail and Express.

A Stab In the Dark

Sometimes fails of its murderous intent. The insidious and dastardly attacks made upon the reputation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters by persons who seek to aim off cheap and fiery tonics as identical with it, or "the thing under another name," or "equally as good," in most instances react disastrously upon the unprincipled traders upon popular credulity who attempt them, converting their speculations into ruinous failures. The Jitters is a pure, wholesome and thorough medicine, adapted to the total cure and prevention of fever and ague, biliousness, dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, debility, nervousness and kidney troubles. Its every ingredient unlike those in the imitations of it, is of an ascertained standard of excellence, and while they, by reason of their fiery properties, react injuriously upon the brain and nervous system, of both those organs it is a sedative and invigorant. Refuse all these harmful imitations.

How Sweet.

A young and pretty girl stepped into a shop where a young man who had been enamored of her, but dared not speak, stood behind the counter. In order to remain as long as possible, she cheapened everything. At last she said: "I believe you think I am cheating." "Oh, no," said he "to me you are always fair." "Well," whispered the lady, "I would not stay so long bargaining if you were not so dear." She did not have to cheapen when the druggist only charged her 25 cents for "Pomeroy's Petroleum Iodurated Plaster" for her mother's Rheumatism; she did not grudge this small sum, for they had found them a sure cure. The liquor bonds of Jacob Zang and John Wuerthner were presented to the council last Tuesday evening, but as the sureties all lived outside the village, they were deemed N. G.—Manchester Enterprise.

The Ann Arbor Argus has not yet corrected its report of the common council meeting at which the mayor voted with the majority to accept the liquor bond of August Herz. That bond contained the name of a man as surety, who does not live in Ann Arbor city. It was publicly admitted on the floor of the council that he was a non-resident, and the city attorney plainly told the council that the bond was N. G. The Argus didn't tell its readers the facts, and afterwards denied any violation of law.

MRS. OKMISTON CHANT.

This eloquent lady from London, England, was not permitted to speak in University hall, for what reason we do not know; but it is a pity because the Unitarian church could not contain all who desired to hear her. She gave a most vivid picture of the distress among the poor of London, and made a noble plea for the solution of the question and the abolition of poverty. THE REGISTER has been hammering away on this subject a good deal, at the risk of being tiresome; for unquestionably it is the greatest of all questions. Prohibition, free trade, protection, woman-suffrage, and all together sink into insignificance before this great fact of poverty. Mr. St. John who spoke Saturday night in Ann Arbor, dreams of a time when prohibition will eradicate the drink habit; but prohibition, although useful in itself, can never do that while poverty remains, for poverty and the fear of poverty and its consequent misery are the great causes of drunkenness. Poverty of the most alarming kind exists in countries where there is free trade, and in countries where there is protection.

The churches have no other so great a foe as poverty. It is useless trying to advise people to Christ's gentle ways if they are suffering from poverty or who have a dreadful fear of it which causes selfishness. Hungry people will not listen to a sermon. It is time, therefore, that the churches were discussing this question. If poverty is a necessary thing decreed by God, then the enemies of the church have a powerful weapon; because it doesn't at first thought look right that a supreme power should ordain any such thing as poverty. But if poverty is not a law of God; if it arises from some bad adjustment by man himself, then the churches ought to see that the remedy is applied. It was thought for a long time that God was in favor of aristocracies, of kingships, slavery, and other forms of evil. But that idea has been mostly given up. Perhaps it may be found that He never established poverty as one of the laws of nature, and that it is man's selfishness or ignorance which causes it. The Church cannot afford to turn away from a wrong. Its great enemy, Col. Ingersoll, has declared that he believes poverty will be banished. He does not mean that there will ever be a time when all men will be equally well off in this world's goods and in ability; but he believes that the scramble and struggle for the bare necessities of life is not necessary. There is sufficient in document for effort even if every person who is willing to work can be sure of a good living.

Terrible Accident.

Monday night, while coupling cars at Hamburg Junction, Conductor C. F. Eddy, of the T. & A. R. R., was caught between two cars and badly injured. Dr. Herdman, of this city, the company's physician, found the unfortunate man's right arm so badly crushed as to necessitate amputation just below the shoulder; his left arm was broken and dislocated at the shoulder, and four ribs broken. His chances for recovery were considered very small, Tuesday, but when last heard from he was as well as could be expected. The railroad men claim that the accident was caused by cars having a certain kind of deadwood from other states, that are prohibited from entering this state. Mr. Eddy not knowing the nature of the bumpers used on the cars was injured in consequence. He is a married man and lives in Toledo.

Mrs. Chant who recently gave a lecture here, spoke in Detroit Monday evening at the Unitarian church, on "Political Conditions and Reforms." After the lecture she was given a reception by Mrs. E. C. Skinner which was largely attended. Of Mrs. Chant the Tribune says: "Mrs. Chant is truly a remarkable woman. Besides her shining ability as a public speaker, poet and journalist, she is a woman of great endurance. In ten months she has travelled 15,000 miles, delivered 500 lectures, and found time to make all the clothes worn by her four children."

PROHIBITION RATIFIED.

John P. St. John's Speech in the Opera House in Ann Arbor.

Saturday afternoon, ex-Gov. St. John, of Kansas, arrived in this city over the T. & A. R. R., and was met by a large concourse of citizens and students. In the evening he addressed an enthusiastic meeting at the opera house, which listened to his remarks with close attention, and frequently interrupted him with hearty applause.

After singing, and prayer by Rev. S. Haskell, President E. S. Shaw, of the University prohibition club, in a few laudatory remarks, introduced the distinguished speaker. As he came forward he was greeted with a storm of applause lasting half a minute. When quiet was restored, Mr. St. John began speaking in a slow deliberate way and said:

"We have been told that we are in the minority, that we always will be, that the prohibition movement will never win. Well, I found out that we were in the minority in 1884, when Grover Cleveland and James G. Blaine combined and beat me for the presidency. (Laughter.) But I have forgiven them for that, they had the same right to run for president as I had. This prohibition movement is going to win, just as sure as you live; and it won't be five years before we will have control of things in this country, and when we come to handing out the post offices, and the other good things, we will have to build a stone fence around this party and put a barbed wire on top, to keep the politicians of the other parties out.

"This great question must be taken up and carried through by the Prohibition Party. Neither of the old parties can take the question up and live. No old party ever yet took up a new issue. Supposing the Republican party at the Chicago convention should put a prohibition plank in their platform, why every whiskey Republican would quietly go over to the Democratic party, and the Republican Party couldn't carry a single state. Supposing the Democratic party should put a prohibition plank into their platform, why the whole party would go over to the Republican ranks and there would be nothing left of it. But I am glad to say that the men of God are coming out of both parties into the new party, and with Fisk at our head we will win a victory that means something to the homes of this country.

"Now I am not going to abuse the saloon-keeper, because I don't believe in abusing a man engaged in a lawful business. The saloon-keeper is just as good as the saloon he keeps, and the saloon is just as good as the law that legalizes it, and the law is just as good as the church deacon who votes for that license.

"I have no use for a man who prays 364 days in the year for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and on the 365th day votes to legalize it. You say prohibition won't work here. The trouble is, there are too many here who don't want it to work. You come to Kansas, and I will show you a state where it works. There is not an open saloon in the state today. We have had prohibition since 1880. Had a big fight there. The Republicans tried to carry the church on one shoulder, and the saloon on the other, while the Democrats tried to carry the saloon on both. They say prohibition kills business. Well let's see about that. Since 1880 the taxable wealth of Kansas has doubled; our railroad mileage has doubled; Topeka then had 11,000 population, it now has 40,000; Lawrence then had 4,800, it now has 35,000; Leavenworth had 3,000, it now has 16,000. That's the way it kills cities! That's the way it injures business! Topeka has 50,000 population and only 20 policemen! Have not had a drunken man in the city prison for three years! That's pretty good aint it? In the Sunday school one day, I asked of the children how many had ever seen a drunken man; but very few hands went up. In high license Illinois I asked the same question of a Sunday school, and every hand went up, and one little fellow said he had seen two that very day.

"The Republican party say we are trying to kill them. Why bless your hearts, the Republican party died a natural death in 1884. It had been dying for years. In 1872 your majority in the northern states was in round numbers, 400,000. In 1884 it was only 100,000. Now as the Prohibitionists only polled 150,000, and taking it for granted that they all came out of the Republican party, which is not the case, were your other 150,000 votes? In Michigan the party submitted a prohibition amendment to the people to catch the temperance vote, and then turned around and defeated it to catch the whiskey vote. A Republican legislature passed the local option law, and either were foolishly ignorant of what a law ought to be or else wilfully passed it, as a sop to the temperance party, and then sent it to the Supreme Court to be decided unconstitutional. It is simply a Dred Scott decision. It was the same way in Iowa, where the people had spent thousands of dollars, and a Republican Supreme Court declared the law void.

"Look at the position of the two chiefs of the two old parties. Cleveland wrote his last message in the winter, and his mind would naturally turn to more covering, so he said woolen blankets should be free. He wanted them cheaper, just as cheap as they could be had. Blaine "caught on" immediately and says, now I will go for something that is good all the year round. So he declares tobacco to be a necessity. We must have tobacco. So there you have it, wool and tobacco, tobacco and wool,—the all absorbing topics of the day. Not a word said about the homes of the land. Not a word said about the rum traffic. No! Neither Cleveland nor Blaine dare even point their finger at the saloon power. They truckle to it by letting it alone. Last week at Indianapolis we had a convention,—one of the grandest conventions ever held. There we nominated Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, of New York, for President, and John A. Brooks, of Missouri, for Vice President,—two grand, noble, spotless men, who, if they do not lead us to victory, will place us higher upon the ladder of success than we have ever been before. Prohibition is right and must prevail!"

ON THE CAMPUS.

The Glee club sang in Detroit Monday night.

Ill health has compelled U. S. Howold, '91 to give up his studies.

The law building will furnish the dining room this year for commencement day.

The Ladies' tennis association have politely notified the buys to play on their own grounds.

Fred, and Walter Kent, seniors of the high school, are at home, in Dundee, sick with the measles.

The high school seniors have stopped the regular English course, and are engaged in special work.

The different classes are taking up subscriptions to purchase memorial mantles for the S. C. A. building.

Yesterday was eye clinic day at the hospital, and a large number of patients were on hand for treatment.

The twelve seniors of the high school who are to take part in the public exhibition, are studying up on elocution.

The junior medics were much surprised, Monday, on being told that their examinations would begin this week, as they had understood they would not come on till next week.

The Lawn Tennis association will hold the spring tournament on the campus, Saturday, beginning at 8:30 a. m. Among the prizes are a silver cup, gold badge, one-half dozen tennis balls, and some prizes of lesser value.

The senior law invitations are out, and are very handsome, but many of the boys are kicking because all those on committees had their names printed on them, when no such thing was talked of at the time the invitations were ordered.

The Students lecture association met last Saturday, President Read presiding. After listening to the report of Secretary Bracewell, nominations for president for the ensuing year, were made. Remington nominated Jennings and Perry thought Nafe would fill the bill. On the first ballot Mr. Jennings received a majority and was declared elected. Mr. Coolidge of '90, was elected vice-president; F. S. Loomis, '89 corresponding secretary; F. C. Severance, '89, treasurer; H. B. Dewey, '90, assistant treasurer.

COUNTY NEWS.

Delmer Brooks, of Ypsilanti, for a long time a freight conductor on the M. C. R., died suddenly in that city last Thursday.

The Ypsilanti Sentinel lauds Sell's circus to the skies, but of Decoration day it says, "we have no particular respect for this empty tribute," etc. There is no accounting for tastes.

A few nights ago Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Backus, of Webster, were surprised by a large party of friends who came to congratulate them on the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage.

The third regular meeting of the "Webster teachers' association" will be held at the church school house, dist. No. 2, Webster, Saturday, June 23, at 10 p. m. The following papers will be read and discussed: "Literature as an auxiliary in teaching."

The exercises for children have been postponed till a later date in the churches here. Miss Edith Murray is among the sick. Dr. Frederick is still unable to ride. Fred. Berry, the evangelist has been holding meetings at the Baptist church during the past week.

Fred. Roper and wife, of Ann Arbor, visited here Saturday and Sunday. The hotels already have regular boarders. Nelson Stevens has graded the lawn about his cottage and now has the place in very good shape.

The funeral of Oliver Kimberly was held at the Congregational church Saturday. Rev. J. E. Butler officiating. The Farmer's club holds its June meeting at the residence of E. S. Cushman, Saturday. A large company of Webster folks attended the missionary meeting at Ann Arbor, Wednesday.

The ways of the saloonist and other people of similar stamp will probably be ways of peace and plenty, as the common council have chosen "Jake" Martin to the position of city marshal. There was a free train run from this city to Dexter, Sunday, to accommodate all who wished to attend the funeral of Delmer Brooks, one of the M. C. R. conductors, who died so suddenly last week Wednesday.

Abby Morton Diaz in her remarks contended that the most effective work for humanity is not always among the working women, or the repulsively bad or miserably poor; that there are found among the well to do women and the rich many whose standards are untrue, ambitions low, aims unworthy, their occupations frivolous, and their desires centered upon self; that this class of persons are often more truly fallen than those we have so often branded as such; that she is the fallen woman who falls into selfhood, or who lives chiefly in her own lower nature.

One who has the germ of true politeness in his heart can never be boorish, and our aim should be to make the foundation of courtesy solid; then there will be no cracks in its superstructure. With a kind heart, the face speaks the words of politeness and the bands act the courtesies. We want no counterfeits, but the real thing. No "thanks," that come out like words from a rubber stamp, but the "I thank you," that is each time written with an individuality of its own.

Nearly one-half the population are more or less afflicted with neuralgic pains. Instead of sending for the doctor, who will probably prescribe a plaster and a dose of medicine, advise the sufferer to heat a flat iron, put a double fold of flannel on the painful part, then move the iron to and fro on the flannel. The pain will cease almost immediately.

Sit erect and inflate the lungs fully. Then, retaining the breath, bend forward slowly until the chest meets the knees. After slowly rising again to an erect position slowly exhale the breath. Repeat this process a second time, and the nerves will be found to have received an excess of energy that will enable them to perform their natural functions.

The best use for coal ashes is to make paths and good roads. A good coating of them upon a path, with a little soil thrown upon the surface to help solidify them, soon becomes a walk equal to asphalt, and very pleasant to walk upon.

Baked potatoes must be eaten as soon as they are done. When they are taken from the oven they should be put into a napkin or towel and the skin broken, so as to allow the steam to escape; this will keep the potato mealy.

The ravages of the cut-worm many farmers are finding it necessary to replant their corn; that the Messrs. Squires have the foundation laid for a fine large building to be used for the storage of onions the ensuing season; that the vast well-tilled fields devoted to the culture of several hundred acres of onions, through which one drives as on a boulevard, presents a very decided contrast to the swamp-covered, impenetrable wilderness of a few years ago, around which it was necessary to drive on the most execrable of corduroy roads; that Henry DePue has a force of from twenty-five to thirty men at work on the Ann Arbor and Lodi gravel road, while in the southeast part of the town, treasurer H. H. Webb, White, Miller and others, with commendable effort, are putting the road in fit condition for a bicycle tournament.

Mrs. C. H. Kempf and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. G. H. Kempf, will leave on Friday for Saratoga Springs, N. Y., to witness the graduation of Miss Myra Kempf from Temple Grove ladies' seminary. Important and even luxurious improvements are being made in some of the cottages of Cavanaugh lake. Pleasure galore is surely in store for somebody.

The event of the week in social life, was the marriage of Miss Josie H. McLaren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James McLaren, of Chelsea, to Mr. Will A. Brewer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Addison P. Brewer, of East Saginaw. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents on Wednesday afternoon, June 6, 1888, before a very large and brilliant assembly, by Rev. Dr. Thomas Holmes, of Chelsea.

who would willingly take her place, but she will not resign the privilege. If the little feet are cold, which is frequently the case, the mother holds them close to the fire and rubs them briskly with her hand until circulation is started.

"My arms often ache after I have given the Children their good night kisses," she once said, with a smile, "but then," she added, "I have my reward in knowing that the darlings are warm, comfortable and happy."

Dangerous attacks of croup, diphtheria or fatal sore throat can often be traced to neglect of the children's feet.—M. A. Thurston in Good Housekeeping.

For a Severe Burn. The pain caused by being severely burned may be almost instantly relieved by applying a mixture of strong, fresh, clean lime water mixed with as much linseed oil as it will cut. Before applying, wrap the burn in cotton wadding saturated with the lotion. Wet as often as it appears dry, without removing cotton from burn for nine days, when a new skin will probably have formed.

To Cure Hiccoughs. Sit erect and inflate the lungs fully. Then, retaining the breath, bend forward slowly until the chest meets the knees. After slowly rising again to an erect position slowly exhale the breath. A severe cold and perhaps an attack of pneumonia may be prevented if preliminary symptoms are heeded. A chilly sensation along the spinal column, a cold, clammy feeling across the chest are sure indications that a severe cold is trying to settle in the system.

MEDICAL STUDENTS.

WHAT ZURICH UNIVERSITY IS DOING FOR THE FAIR SEX.

A Dissecting Room Full of Lady Students. The Scalpel in Taper Fingers—Enthusiasm in Scientific Work—An Interesting Sight—A Discussion.

The workshop of a medical college! But, in place of spectacled young men with long gowns and sharp scalpels, there are a score of girls robed in protecting overalls and deftly dissecting the subjects before them. That's what I saw in the preparatory school to the medical branch of the Zurich university.

Don't think this dissecting room is an absolute place of horror. The bodies are divided into their several parts before the students approach them, and each young lady has her chosen portion to operate upon. This reduces the uncanny appearance to a considerable extent, for no bodies entire are to be seen lying on the many slabs or tables.

At one table where I stopped a delicate and spirituelle young lady, holding in her gloved hands a razor like knife and pair of fine pinchers, was cutting at a disembodied head, studying the organs of sight, probing into the cavities of the brain and plucking useful thoughts from what to me was a ghastly trophy.

"Yes," she said, in reply to my question suggested in virtue of a slight acquaintance I had with her, "I make the eye my specialty, for I believe, in addition to being one of the most interesting points to study, it is likewise a more potent factor than is generally believed in the health of an individual. I have known persons to suffer from severe headaches and pains in the back who have attributed the trouble entirely to spinal disorders, when, as a fact, it arose from their eyes being out of focus."

A little farther on a disciple of this glorious art stood over a partially cut leg, from which she was stripping the skin and flesh and explaining the muscles, as they presented themselves, to the several new scholars who stood about her, intent upon her motions. There was no hesitancy in her incisions, she cut with a clean stroke, and every time the blade fell just where it was intended. She was graceful and emphatic in her treatment of the subject, and under ready tongue the relations of the various nerves, tendons and muscles she exposed were made clear and carried their full meaning to the expectant audience about her.

In a distant corner a young woman and several male students were discussing an abnormal growth discovered by one of them in the trunk of a one time sturdy Frenchman, resting upon their particular slab. There appeared to be considerable difference in opinion prevailing, and I remarked with a certain elation peculiar, perhaps, to my sex, that the young woman held her ground and her idea stubbornly, and the young men paid due and proper attention to what she frequently said.

I next noticed a fashionably attired damsel, wearing a promenade dress and having every indication of being in the mode, who, protected only by a small white apron plentifully decorated with varicolored ribbons, was cutting and scraping at an arm, baring the muscles with an ease and dexterity that were certainly natural, and could never have been wholly acquired. At first sight I judged this apparently wordly and giddy creature was prompted by some morbid passion to amuse herself in this manner, but when I asked the professor who accompanied me, he said she was the most skillful manipulator of the scalpel among all those then attendant, and could strip a muscle as cleanly and as beautifully as an established surgeon.

The professor further assured me that the women were particularly dexterous in handling muscles. Their small, taper fingers gave them an advantage over the males, and their eyes were quicker to detect details and minutiae. After once becoming accustomed to the use of the scalpel, the women are more patient than the men, and they prosecute their researches more persistently.

It was to me very interesting to watch the girls mingling with their male colleagues and studying with them the terrible mystery of human construction. There was no jocoseness, no loud talking or unseemly mirth. All was quiet, orderly, strictly in the line of business. The young lady to whom I have referred was the only one who gave any suggestion of the outer world, and she was eccentric; she was a genius and assumed the privilege of genius.

The male students do not hesitate to openly declare their opposition to the presence of women in the medical profession, and yet when brought in contact with them in the operating room they treat the females with the utmost deference and respect.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., June 1.—On the fortieth ballot in this city yesterday Frank J. Fleming, of Jacksonville, was nominated by the Democratic State convention for governor.

NEW YORK, June 2.—Unquestionably the great oratorical event of the Republican National convention will be the speech of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, as it was in the Republican convention of 1876, when, for the first time he christened Illinois, his native State, to present Judge Gresham's name to the convention, and has agreed to do so.

BOSTON, June 5.—After twenty-four years of continuous service in that capacity Frederick O. Prince, of this city, resigned the secretaryship of the Democratic National Committee and also his membership in the committee.

Mr. Wm. A. Siebold, with George P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce Street, New York, writes: 'I feel it my duty, for the benefit of others who may be afflicted as I was, to write you this letter, which you can use in any way you choose.'

SCENES AT THE OPENING.

ST. LOUIS, June 6.—The Democratic National convention began to gather in the early hours of the morning. The trickling of humanity which began to run into the big Exposition Building as early as 5 o'clock, soon grew to a torrent, which surged in and filled the great nave of the hall to overflowing.

The noble proportions of the hall strike at once with admiration. It is oblong in shape, relieved on either side by balconies reaching back 20 feet, above which, stretching entirely around the auditorium, is a broad overhanging gallery. It has already been fully described.

The visiting clubs with emblazoned banners, come in late, but as each well-known organization is recognized they are greeted with cheers. The Tammany-Hall braves are among the first to appear, followed closely by the New York County Democracy and a local St. Louis organization.

At noon all of the delegations have arrived at the convention hall except those from New York and Missouri. The absence of the New York delegation makes a large gap in the center of the space reserved for the delegates, and the convention waits with mingled feelings of curiosity and impatience for the appearance of the Empire State's representatives.

The Fools of Europe.

Omaha Dame—I suppose you traveled all over Europe?
Returned Tourist—Very nearly; the fact is I became disgusted and returned before my projected tour was completed.
"Disgusted with Europe?"
"Yes. Wherever I went people asked me all sorts of questions about Niagara Falls, the Mammoth Cave, the Yosemite Valley, the Rocky Mountains, the Thousand Islands and dear knows what all, and just because I couldn't answer them the fools thought I was a London adventurer."—Omaha World.

Too Much Gloom.
A pair of shiny boots he wore,
Likewise a shiny hat,
And eyed the damsels at the door
Who came out from the mat.

No answering glance they gave bi-back,
As swiftly past they flew
Because, like hat and boots, alike,
His coat was shiny, too! —Boston Courier.

Where Tascott Is Hiding.

Detective Eureka! I've struck it at last. Wife? Struck what?
"The reason Tascott has so completely disappeared from public view, I know where to search for him now. I'll find him."
"Mercy me! Are you going to the north pole?"
"No, indeed. I think he must have got a job as clerk in some store that don't advertise."—Omaha World.

The Lost Dog.

A lady lost her dog; last week,
And this week when she went
To interview the butcher on
The style of meat for Lent,
He pointed to a sausage link—
The lady turned to look,
And when she said she'd take it home,
It wagged right off the hook. —Washington Critic

At the Buck Door.

Tramp (politely)—Madam, will you be kind enough to give me something to eat?
Lady—I'm sorry there isn't a thing in the house except a crust; but if you want that you can have it.
Tramp (with a courtly bow)—If it is the upper crust, madam, I will be pleased to receive it; otherwise I hope you will pardon me if I decline.—Tid Bits.

THE MAN OF ALMONACID.

I am free to confess now that when I first heard of him I took him for a swindler. When I heard that Toledo had been his home for ten whole months—Toledo, which lives only by moonlight, and is the mere corpse of a city in the sunshine—when I heard of a modesty so very retiring, and remembered that England had no extradition treaty with Spain, my only wonder was as to the sum of his spoils. Was he a defaulter for thirty thousand pounds, or a petty rogue of all work?

"Ten months! That is a long time!" I said to Donna Mercedes, my informant, and the elder of the two old maids who kept the Casa de Huespedes, in which I found that he was a stranger to a neighbor. "One might see the antiquities even of Toledo in that time."
"Truly," she answered; "but then, Don Iago is a painter."
"Ah, now I understand!" I replied, with a great increase of cheerfulness. "One might paint Toledo for ten years and not have done it, too, am a painter."

"And no doubt," said the old dame, beaming upon me through her round rimmed spectacles. "Don Iago will be known to you?"
I took up the visitors' book, in which that sand had not yet dried my autograph. "James Clent," I said, reading the name to which she pointed. "No, I do not know him."

Dona Mercedes was puzzled, being scarcely able to understand that two Englishmen, even two English artists, might be strangers to one another. But presently she crossed herself. "Don Iago is an old Christian," she said softly, and so went off with her book, benevolent still, but conscious, I fear, of a serpent in her Eden.
Eden was our boarding house. From a paved alley, the Calle del Arzobispo, you turned into an archway and groped for a door up three steps in the darkest corner. Then you pulled a weight which hung there and by and by the iron studded door opened as of itself and lo! a tiny courtyard, in which four orange trees in tubs produced an effect of somber glory. Round this patio, at the level of a first floor, ran a veranda, reached by an uncovered staircase. All the rooms opened on to this veranda. On the right hand side were four little bedrooms. On the side which faced the entrance was the common parlor and on the left the kitchen and the old ladies' room, at a window of which one was always sitting ready to open the outer door with a cord whenever the bell jangled.

It was all very plain and primitive, but clean, and looking round my bedroom, which had whitewashed walls, and a matted floor, and for furniture a bed, a stool, a basin and a brasero, I found no cause to regret the dingy hotel I had left.
When I passed No. 1, on my way to dinner, the door was ajar, and Dona Mercedes was inside with a lamp in her hand. I paused before the door, and she, looking up, saw me. "Ah!" she said proudly, "did I not tell you that Don Iago was a painter? See here!" And she threw her light upon a picture which was resting on an easel before the window.

I saw at once that it was not badly painted. There was a show of facility about it. And yet it was mediocre, surprising me less by its execution than its subject. Here in Toledo, the grand and bizarre, in the midst of such architectural beauty and grotesqueness as fairly bewildered an artist's eye, my neighbor had not painted a street scene, a Moorish gateway, or a leafy cloister. He had chosen instead a country landscape almost as commonplace as it was dreary; a gray house and a gray, sloping olive grove, and round them bleak, wind swept uplands. I was scarcely more astonished to find that I knew the place. I had passed it the day before in my walk from Torrijos—walking is a whim of mine—and is was fully seven miles from Toledo.

At the time I said something pretty to Dona Mercedes, and went on to the parlor. My neighbor was late. I had nearly finished when he entered. He was a man of 35, perhaps, with a thin, careworn face and lines below the temples. He was about my height, wearing his hair and moustache cut short—a blonde, and English looking. He had probably heard of my arrival, yet he seemed put out at sight of me—perhaps merely because he was late.
"I have left the head of the table for you," I said, half rising, politely. "You have been here some time, I understand."
He was breaking his bread into morsels and eating with a worried air.
"Yes; the place suits me," he answered rather coolly like to hear the lark sing as well as the mouse squeak." I replied, smiling. His tone was not encouraging, but I thought to b* agreeable. "If I am not mistaken, I met you yesterday."

"Not that I am aware of," he said, with a hasty glance at me, and then devoted himself to his soup with renewed zest.

"No?" Or, the pathway—I cannot call it a road—from Torrijos? About 2 o'clock?"
He shook his head. "You are mistaken," he answered. "I was not outside the town yesterday."
"Then I saw a man very like you!" I rejoined, nettled by his manner. "There is a ruined castle, called Almonacid, I believe, about a mile this side of Torrijos. As I was passing it I saw an Englishman, and an artist also, if a portfolio makes an artist, leave it and make quickly for the village before me. Somehow I missed him among the houses, and was too far from him at any time to see his features distinctly. But he was wearing clothes 'ike yours."

"And like yours, too, I presume," he rejoined sharply. He had a way of waiting for you, and taking you up suddenly, of which this was my first experience.
"Just so," I said, for he was right; we were dressed alike. "But I am not aware that the mirage occurs in Spain. Perhaps you know Almonacid?"
"No," he replied, more equably, as if he were ashamed of his show of temper. "I have heard of it. But it is too far for my legs, and I cannot afford horse hire. I sometimes walk out in that direction, but not half as far."
I made a hasty calculation. Almonacid was nine miles from Toledo. The gray house and solitary olive grove were at least seven. So that when my friend said that he had not been half as far as Almonacid, he was not quite truthful, since he must have been to the scene of his picture. But it was no business of mine, and I had good looking men, and that which took him to the dreary farm house might well be a love intrigue—a thing dangerous to enter upon in Spain, more dangerous still to meddle with. I changed the subject.

I had had a difficulty about my letters. The postmaster had refused to give them to me because I had not my passport with me. Later the office had been closed. I told Clent this, and he listened, but his thoughts seemed far away, and when I had done he said, "No doubt you will get them to-morrow," in a perfunctory way, with scarcely a show of sympathy.
"I hope I shall," I answered, annoyed that he made so little of it. "I do not know what I shall do if I fail to get them."
"Oh, you will get them," he repeated carelessly.

He was wrong, as it turned out. But so was I when I went to bed, vowing I hated him. I did not take into account the change which twenty-four hours may make in our feelings. Just one day later I could not have identified the surly man I have described with my friend James Clent—James Clent, who had by that time rescued me from a most unpleasant position, and proved triumphantly that under his rough manner he had a sound heart.

It all arose out of the letters. I called at the postoffice next morning and handed in my passport. Ten minutes afterward I issued from the door dazed and bewildered, at my wits' end what to do. A few paces onward I ran against some one, and, muttering "Ferdone usted!" would have passed on without looking up if the man had not seized me by the arm. It was Clent. "What is it, Mr. Lynton?" he cried good humoredly. "Have some senorita's eyes shot home? Or—but what is it? Can I help you? And he drew me out of the sunshine into the shade of the covered way which runs round the Zocodover, the great square of Toledo.

"Some one has intercepted my letters," I stammered. "A Spaniard called for them this morning, presented one of my visiting cards, and said I was at the Fonda de Lino—where I did stop one night. All that I can get out of the postmaster is that he gave up the letters and that all was done in order. Confound his stolidity! One of them contained 50!"
He whistled. "Then there is no time to be lost, Mr. Lynton," he cried. "Let us go first to the Fonda. It is possible that some busy-body, knowing you did not get your letters yesterday, has fetched them for you on the chance of getting a peseta for his pains."
I gladly assented, and we went together to the hotel. But no one there would confess to knowing anything of my letter. No one had gone for them. As we left the yard I noticed that my companion looked keenly at the waiter, who was not too civil. "Do you suspect him?" I asked, when we were outside.
"I hardly know," Clent answered slowly. "Possibly you mislaid a card the night you slept there, so that he is one of the people to be suspected. But come, we will go now to the postoffice. I will help you as far as I can."

And indeed he did. His knowledge of the language was perfect, and it was wonderful to hear him scolding, questioning and complaining, without end of the wrongs his influential friend, whose passport he was waving under their official noses, had suffered. But when presently everything had been tried, and for the time tried fruitlessly, we stood in the square and looked somewhat blankly at one another.
"I did say," he began, "fifty pounds is a large sum to lose!"
"I wish it were less," I replied, with an attempt at sprightliness.
"It does not cripple you altogether?"
"I can afford it, if that is what you mean. But—but it is a little inconvenient at present," I answered.

"It puts you in a difficulty for a few days?"
"Precisely. I cannot receive another remittance for five days at least. In the meantime I have six—yes, seven pesetas and a half."
"Umph! Call it six shillings and three-pence," he replied, laughing. "The cathedral vergers will soon ease you of it, even were it more. But look here! we are next door neighbors, and you must let me help you. In a strange country I always keep a few pounds by me; they are at your service."

As he spoke he drew from an inner pocket a shabby letter case and took out a 200 peseta note—the only note, I saw, that the case contained.
"I am afraid," I said, doubtfully, "that I am inconveniencing you. And besides, you do not know me."
"I shall not need the money," he replied, quickly, "and as to my knowing you, I think I do—not you, personally, but your kind."
"That is well said!" I exclaimed with heartiness, "and I accept your offer on one condition—that if you want the money before Sunday you will tell me so."
"Why, if I do," he replied, laughing merrily, "you will have spent half of it."
"So I shall," I said, laughing myself, "but I have a watch, and Toledo, no doubt, has a—let me call it a Mont de Piete."

"Certamente!" he cried gaily, and with fit word about meeting at dinner, walked rapidly away, leaving me to my thoughts. I watched him as he threaded his way across the square between laden asses and graceful girls with pitchers, and comparing his slight upright form with the somber Spaniards who strutted up and down, keeping, even on this sunny day, a corner of the capa over the mouth, I felt proud of my countryman.
"I do not think," I said penitently to Jock (I had not mentioned Jock before, although he was at that time my constant companion—a collie dog with the long Scotch head and the tender eyes), "I do not think that I shall be so quick to judge the next man who meet—and do not understand. Ah, these hasty judgments, Jock!" and I shook my head, and Jock his tail.

In due course a second remittance came to hand, and I repaid my friend. By that time some of the wonder I had felt at his solitary life in Toledo—Toledo the somber—had passed away. He was not altogether solitary, putting myself out of the question. More than once, in the archway or on the veranda, I met a priest coming from his room—a small, dark, thin faced man with vivid eyes, a Spaniard, of course, who lifted his low crowned beaver to me and bowed politely. Once, too, I had a glimpse of a petticoat whisking out. Moreover, Clent seemed to be doing a better trade than I had judged probable from the specimen of his work which I had seen. Not that he told me this himself. He was reserved on the subject, neither offering to show me his pictures nor accepting my proposal that we should do some of the work together. But our letters sometimes lay on a slab inside the outer door, and I could not avoid seeing that he received several—dealers' letters, I was sure—from art centers—from Dresden and Munich, for instance. Once there was a letter bearing the postmark of St. Petersburg. This seemed strange in a man of his caliber; in a man who was not known to me. And, perhaps, besides puzzling me, it a little nettled me also. My name was not altogether unknown. Clent himself had said pretty things about his acquaintance with it. Yet I had no continental patrons, no market outside Great Britain.

If I had fallen in with him at Madrid or Seville I should have known what to think; I should have set him down as one of those copyists who live by all great galleries. And something upon which I lit one day in his room persuaded me for a time that this was the case, few as were the works in Toledo that could pay for the labor of copying. It was a picture, and the only one I saw at any time in his possession, save the somber landscape of which I have spoken.
I had run short of chrome yellow, and hearing him go to his room followed to ask him if he could let me have some. "I suppose I cannot get any chrome yellow in Toledo?" I began before I was well in the room, "nor anywhere nearer than Madrid?"
He was kneeling on the floor, but sprang up so quickly at the sound of my voice that I hastened to apologize for entering without knocking. He did not seem, at once, to understand me. He had been poring over something placed on the ground where it would catch the best light, and his first aim appeared to be to move so as to hide this from me. "What is it?" he cried harshly. "What do you want?" Even by that light I could see that his face was pale.

"My dear fellow," I said, not trying to hide my surprise, "I am sorry that I entered without ceremony, and I have told you so. I came in for nothing in the world but to ask you if any chrome yellow can be got nearer than Madrid. I was so full of my wants that, seeing the door was unlatched, I did not knock at it."
"Was it unlatched?" he asked, glancing at me askance.
"I shrugged my shoulders. "Look for yourself," I said curtly.
He stepped forward and saw what I had already noticed—that the bolt was shot, but not into the socket. Something like a stifled curse escaped him. He turned, muttering that I could only get the material I needed in Madrid.

"That is unfortunate. But what have you got here?" I asked, advancing a step into the room. "What a capital bit of painting! It is a Ribera, is it not? It must be!" And, forgetting in my eagerness everything save that I had before me a singularly good copy of a fine picture, I actually waved him aside when he would have interposed. "No one but Ribera," I cried, stooping over it, "could paint those lights and shadows! No one! It is a genuine Spagnoletto for a hundred!"
"It is a copy!" burst from him in a tone of vivid contradiction.
"A copy?" I repeated after him in wonder. "A copy! Of course it is. So I supposed. Ribera do not grow on every bush, my friend. I meant that the original was a Ribera, and not merely of his school. But now you speak of it, and I went down on my knees, 'are you so sure that it is a copy? How bright are these high lights, yet how mellow! And see the depth of the coloring here, and the tawny tone over all! By heaven! I said, rising and facing him abruptly, 'it is not a copy!'"
"It is!" he cried furiously; "I say it is! Do Ribera grow on every bush, madman?"
The word and the passion he threw into it sobered me at once. "I beg your pardon," I said, "I forgot myself. I am sorry for it. But the opinion I have uttered is my opinion still. And if I do not make a mistake," I went on eyeing him shrewdly, "it is yours, too. I fancy, my friend, that you had just made the discovery when I came in, and that you dared hardly to entertain it. It is no wonder that such a thing threw you off your balance."
For he was trembling still, and glancing from me to the painting and back again in a distraught fashion. "Yes," he said at length, getting out his words with difficulty, "I thought it possible, just possible, but how very, very improbable!"
"Yes, very improbable, if, as I suppose, you bought the picture for a copy. But where did you get it?" I asked briskly. "I thought that I was beginning to understand him."
"I bought it from a priest for an old song at Almonacid?"
"At Almonacid?"
He moved uneasily, as if he would have recalled his last word. But it was too late, and he nodded assent. Then after all it was you whom I saw that day?" I continued. "You had just bought it, I suppose."
"Yes, I had a doubt about it then."
"It is a strange story, but strange things happen," I said, watching him narrowly. "It is true."
Of course I pretended to believe him, and seeing clearly that he wished me gone I took myself to my room. In part I did believe him, only I thought it strange that an artist of his caliber should be so greatly ashamed of having outwitted an old monk, so greatly ashamed as to tell the story of his cleverness in that hang dog fashion. It crossed my mind that I might be wrong in my judgment of the picture. It might be that the St. Christopher was only a copy after all, and Clent himself had made it, and was even then when I broke in upon him having it out with his conscience whether he should pass it off for an original or not. That was possible, but to me he had been a friend in need, and it was no business of mine.

The next day, the 17th of January, was to be the last of my stay in Toledo. I had all but finished the sketches I required, and if the truth must be told, I longed to be away. The stillness of the place haunted me. I hated the huge square alcazar which towered over all the Moorish gateways, the hundred silent churches. By noon I had made an aad of my work, and hastily putting asiit my materials I called Jock and started for a long ramble over the hills, where the alcazar did not bar the sunshine, though it was impossible to get out of sight of it. I did not return until darkness drew me back into the town.

Then I saw at once that there was something wrong on foot. In the streets was an unruly bustle, which rather grew than lessened as I approached the middle of the town. Knots of people carrying fagots passed hurriedly or stood together at the street corners. The Zocodover was thronged. As—in part curious and in part annoyed—I was pushing my way through the crowd, a clock struck 6, and, set in motion by that signal, the bells in every tower burst into sound. I was brought to a standstill. I had just time to wonder what it meant, when as by magic the bright glare of a hundred fires leaped up above the crowd, and glowing hotly on pillar and gable, flung huge shadows on the very steeples, and exposed at once a hundred silhouettes.

It was a weird yet a beautiful sight. It pleased me to find it repeated in every street and open space I entered. I spent fully an hour, tired as I was, in hurrying up and down to mark the effect of the firelight on this facade or that archway. And when at length I took myself away and went home, I made quickly for the parlor to talk of what I had seen.

What French Children Are Taught.

In all French schools there are in use manuals of history, showing the growth and the character of the social, legal and political institutions of the nation. Every child grows up to comprehend France. He knows what has been the evolution of the past, and by what stages affairs reached their present condition. He is not likely to be a reactionist, and endeavor to involve the nation in old experiments, already tried. The fault of all faults in American education is the very small amount of knowledge acquired of the why and the wherefore of existing institutions. Every child should know with what difficulty certain constitutional provisions were secured, and their relative value in free government. Political economy and republican institutions should be studied in elementary form by all pupils of 15. At 21 the boy begins to think at public affairs. It would be well if our suffrage were based on a knowledge of our institutions.—Globe-Democrat.

IN A STEAM LAUNDRY.

HOW DIRTY CLOTHES ARE CLEANED ON A LARGE SCALE.

The First Operation—Soap Dissolved in Hot Water—Through the Wringer—i, the Drying Room—Starched and Unstarched Clothing—Ironing.

There isn't much time lost in a laundry in any department. Thirty-five people, including drivers and receivers, and deliverers of goods, will handle 2,000 shirts, 200 dozens of cuffs and collars and 60,000 pieces of ordinary clothing in a week, and while doing this they will take in a shirt, wash and iron it, and wrap it up for delivery in two hours and a quarter. The first operation is in the wash room. Here are seen rows of washing machines, circular, with an inner perforated revolving and reversing chamber for the clothes. The clothes are thrown into this, 125 shirts at a time, or the equal of that in other pieces, and clear filtered water run in on them and the chamber starts revolving, making a dozen revolutions in one direction, it automatically reverses and makes the same number in the other, the clothes falling back on the ribbed sides. Bar soap is something that is almost unknown in a steam laundry. The soap used is received in large barrels of clear white shavings, and is called "chipped laundry." One of these barrels makes eight of suds, being thrown into a large vat and there boiled with water until it has been fully dissolved and reduced to about the consistency of buttermilk. This is always kept in stock cool, and poured into the washers while the inner chamber is still revolving, the motion being between the perforated shell of this chamber and the water tight covering. The clothes are washed, rinsed and blued in this tub by the aid of valves, the first suds being warm, the second boiling, and the rinsing cold. The clothes are rinsed and then blued, the full operation requiring but an hour and twenty minutes.

From the washer the clothes go to the wringer, though this machine gets its name simply because it performs the same service as the household wringer. It looks more like a boiling kettle, though investigation shows it to be double, the inner one being perforated and revolving 300 times a minute. The clothes are thrown in this, the power put on, and being thrown again into the wringer, the sides are dried in a few minutes. The kettle takes in 100 large, heavy linen sheets at a time, drying them in thirty minutes. From this the clothes go up stairs to the drying and starching room. Cuffs, collars and shirts and such articles as must be starched are thrown into a revolving and reversing machine similar to the washer, and are then passed through an ordinary wringer, if necessary, or hung up to dry. The dry room is surrounded by steam pipes, the "horse" on which the clothes are hung being pulled out on rollers while the clothes are being hung, and then pushed back. It matters not whether the sun is shining and the wind blowing, or the rain coming down a bucketful at a drop. In twenty or thirty minutes the clothes are out dry. The unstarched goods go to the mangier, and the starched ones to the upper story to be ironed.

There are not many cheats about a steam laundry, but there is one in mangling which has never been detected. The mangier is a series of blanketed rollers, with a large central steel cylinder, kept very hot. The clothes are passed through this twice, coming out with every appearance of having been ironed. Two out of three ladies sending family washing to the laundry accompany it with a note directing the laundryman to starch their tablecloths or spreads. Does he do it? Not often. Instead, he takes the clothes as they come from the wringer, straightens them out and runs them through the mangier damp, giving them frequently an extra turn through the machine. They come out stiff and glossy, but without starch, and the housewife never knows the difference. The mangier is one of the greatest pieces of machinery used in a laundry. On large clothes or sheets, two girls operate it, one on either side, and in the course of an ordinary day they will run through or iron 10,000 to 12,000 pieces. On towels and napkins four girls can work at a machine very comfortably. The mangier has a pressure of 200 pounds to the inch, and if the girls ever get a finger in ahead of the cloth it is gone sure.

Starched articles of clothing go to another department after leaving the drying room. Cuffs and collars are ironed in a machine somewhat similar to the mangier; first, however passing through a dampener, two rubber rolls running over a steel roll, the bottom of which is in water. The linen is then passed and repassed between the ironing rolls, the pressure producing the gloss. It then passes through a shaping machine, a very simple contrivance, similar to that used in other branches of trade for the same purpose. Turned down collars, however, are submitted to a different process. They are run through a curious little machine, with an upper roller, to which water is conveyed. This runs along the seam, where the bend is to be made, and passing out the corner is bent without cracking. There is also a trick of this same kind in buttoning stiffly starched pieces, employed altogether in a laundry, and to a limited extent outside. The laundry girls call it "spitting on the backs"; inelegantly, it may be, but nevertheless impressively. The button hole is simply wet slightly on the back side, and this done the button may be slipped through the stiffest button hole with the greatest ease.

The ironing of a shirt is an interesting feature of laundry work. It is a curious point that an iron is never used except in finishing, and then only a perforated iron which, while used in the same way as a sad iron (cannot be called by that name). Before its use, too, the shirt is ironed so that it would be acceptable to nine out of ten men. The shirt first goes to the bosom ironer. This is a young lady attended more like a school mistress than a laundry girl. The shirt is first fastened to a board, or an iron hand printing press bed, shaped like the old shirt board, clamped down at the neck and bottom, and run under a steel roller, heated by gas from the center, the gas flame being fanned by air until it is brought to a blue heat. Passing under this roller and back again, the bosom is pretty and glossy enough for a ball event. The shirt then goes to the band ironer, and the young lady who operates this must have considerable skill, more, indeed, than any one would imagine. Her work is (imply to iron and shape the neck and wristbands between heated wheel rollers. Frequently a collar is sent back to the laundry, the owner saying it is not his, as it does not fit him. The trouble really is in the seemingly simple shaping and ironing of the neckband. The important part of the work is then done, and the shirt goes to the body ironer. The machine used here is also a gas heated cylinder, which performs its work perfectly and very rapidly. Then the solitary ironer takes the shirt and finishes something that seems already finished. With the exception of this finishing and the sprinkling of shirts, there is not a move about a steam laundry not done by machinery.—Globe-Democrat

Counterfeiting a Baking Powder.

The public is too well informed as to the danger from alum baking powders to need any caution against using them. It is, nevertheless, a fact that many of our most prudent and careful house-keepers are, without knowing it, using these deleterious articles daily, and from them preparing for their families food which, were they aware of its nature, they would not offer to a beggar. Baking powder made from burnt alum costs less than four cents a pound. When these can be worked off in place of the Royal Baking Powder, and sold for forty or fifty cents a pound, there are manufacturers and dealers sufficiently unscrupulous to do it.

A favorite method of selling these poisonous alum baking powders is by placing them in an empty Royal Baking Powder can and weighing them out in small quantities when the Royal Baking Powder is called for by customers. The grocer, if questioned, claims that he buys in large packages at a lower rate, and is thus able to sell below the price of the goods in the small cans. All baking powders sold in this way are entitled to suspicion. Analyses of many of them have been made with a view to prosecution, and in all cases they have been found largely adulterated and generally made from poisonous burnt alum. This is selling counterfeit goods, and is, of course, an offence against the law. We are glad to know that the Royal Baking Powder Company have taken the matter in hand, and are acting in a way that will protect the public from the swindle.

The surest protection from this fraud is for the housekeeper to buy the baking powder of the brand she wishes in the original unbroken package, looking carefully to see that the label has not been tampered with. The Royal Baking Powder Company announce, which is well-known, that their goods are packed for the convenience of consumers in cans of various sizes, but are never sold in bulk, by the barrel or loose by weight or measure. The cans are securely sealed with the company's trade mark label, and weight of each package stamped on the cover. Any baking powder being peddled out by weight under the name of Royal they denounce as bogus and to be avoided.

Consumers should bear these facts in mind if they do not wish to have imposed upon them the poisonous alum stuff that is being profusely distributed throughout the country under the name of baking powder. If, however, they buy the Royal Mn cans with unbroken labels, they are always sure of using a baking powder perfectly pure and wholesome, and of the highest test, strength and efficiency.
