A Panic Stricken Atlanta Man.

An Atlanta man had a very thrilling experience the other day. He had occasion to go a short distance up the Georgia Pacific road, and was thinking of the late accident of Nitkajack creek, as he looked out of the window on the trees and bushes flitting past. Suddenly just ahead and coming rapidly toward the train on which he was, the man saw another passenger train coming flying around a curve in the road. He jumped from his seat and started for the door. Remembering his overcoat, he turned back and caught the coat from the back of the seat. "Look out for a collision!" he yelled, as he started toward the door. Everybody jumped from their seats and made a wild rush for the door. As the excited man had his hand on the door-knob there was a rushing sound outside, and the approaching train dashed harmlessly by on the Western and Atlantic track, running parallel to the other. The man sank pale and gasping upon a coal box near the door.—Savannah News.

"Nym Crinkle."

In this great metropolis there is no more interesting personality than that of "Nym Crinkle," who is known in private life as Mr. A. C. Wheeler. He is a slender, well made man above the average height. He has nervous hands, an aristocratic head, and eyes full and blue. His gray blonde hair and mustache testifies to his forty years. Mentally, he reminds one of Robert Louis Stevenson. There is the same fascinating facility in picturesque phrasing, the same love of dainty argument, and fine spun analysis in quaint lines of thought. Socially, Nym Crinkle is gentle; his cruelty is all in his pen. Wit, poet and cynical philosopher, he is anything in appearance but a journalist. Instead of growing thinner, his writing gets broader and better as he gets older.—Current Literature.

Black Stockings.

As it is so fashionable for both children and grown folks to wear black stockings, it is well to know how to wash them so they will not fade. Both cotton and woolen should always be washed before they are worn. Lay them all night to soak in cold water. Wash them next day by themselves in two waters, warm, but not hot, the soap being previously rubbed into the water so as to form a lather before the stockings are put in, and mixing with the first water a tablespoonful of gall. Then rinse them, first in lukewarm water, until the dye ceases to come out and the last water is colorless. Stretch them and hang them out immediately in the air to dry as fast as possible.—National Stockman.

To Cure Frost Bites.

A splendid cure for frost bites is a solution of alum and water, strong as can be made. Hold the frosted flesh in the solution till the frost is drawn out. This you will know easily, as the flesh will look wrinkled as one's hands do on wash days. You will feel no more inconvenience from that frost bite.

The following passage occurs in a notice recently posted on the court house door by constable of Wicomico county, Md.: "I have seeded and took into execution, a'cordin to law and iniquity, the following aforesaid property."

At a western church fair a device for getting up a testimonial to the pastor bore the following legend: "Drop a dollar in the slot and see the pastor smile."

Remarkable Surgery.

The science of surgery has made such wonderful progress in modern times that the most intricate and delicate operations are now undertaken; and carried to a successful issue. There are now several well authenticated cases of what is known as pneumotomy, that is to say, the removal of diseased portions of the lungs in cases of consumption. While however, this delicate operation has sometimes been successfully performed, the risks attending it are so great, and the chances of recovery so slight, that it is seldom resorted to. The late Dr. Pierce's Men's Medical Discovery, this will surely cure the disease in its earlier stages, by roughly arresting the ravages of the terrible malady, by removing its causes and clearing the lungs.

The Woman's Press Club, of Cincinnati, has thirteen members.

The New Prize Story

is eagerly sought for, read with pleasure or disappointment, is then tossed aside and forgotten. But ladies who read of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, read it again, for they discover in it something to prize—a messenger of joy to those suffering from functional derangements or any of the painful disorders or weaknesses peculiar to their sex. Periodical pains, internal inflammation and ulceration, readily yield to its wonderful curative and healing powers. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

SWEPT BY A FLAMES.

Six Acres Burned Over in the City of Eufala, N. Y.

Over Forty Buildings Destroyed—The Daman, animated at $2,500,000—One Person Killed and Seventeen Others Injured.

STORY OF THE DISASTER.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 4.—The great fire Saturday morning did the most disastrous work in Buffalo since the embryo city was swept in flames in 1813 and only one house was left standing. A blaze in the heart of the manufacturing portion of the city was fanned by a high wind loaded with snow, and destroyed more property than fire ever destroyed before in Buffalo. Flames were discovered at 2:45 o'clock in the upper portion of the new big five-story building of Koot & Keating, the leather merchants, at the southwest corner of Wells and Carroll streets. Within an hour the great block was a mass of flaming ruins, and despite the efforts of the fire department other buildings in the vicinity quickly caught from the flying fagots of fire. The Arlington Hotel and the Brozel House were soon in flames, but fortunately there was no loss of life from the bright glow of the Root & Keating fire awakened the guests, who sought shelter elsewhere. The Sibley & Holmwood block at Seneca and Wells, the new iron building of Sherman B. Jewett & Comp ny, the Root & Keating block and the Hoffeld building, and the hotels mentioned are among the principal buildings destroyed. Many other buildings were gutted by the flames, and before the fire was fully under control at 6 o'clock a good sized section of the Second ward had been gutted. Wells Street, between Seneca and Exchange, was lined with wrecked buildings. And the fire penetrated easterly and westerly and leaped across Seneca street, damaging a dozen buildings and gutting two or three. Step by step the firemen were driven back from the center of the fire, and at 4:30 o'clock it seemed as though the flames had passed beyond the control of human beings. Indeed, all that prevented a quarter of Buffalo's business section from utter destruction were the heavy brick walls of the great Jewett iron block, of the Shepard Hardware Company's and the Hoffeld buildings.

Saturday morning shortly after 10 o'clock a portion of the walls of the Arlington Hotel fell in, burying four firemen. Three were quickly excavated, but the body of the fourth, that of Sandy Marion, was not recovered till late in the afternoon. An examination showed that he died of suffocation.

Seventeen firemen and onlookers received injuries during the progress of the fire from falling bricks, cornices, etc., and beams from the intense heat. About 1000 people are thrown out of employment by the fire. As close an estimate of the losses as can be made now places the damage at $2,500,000. Forty buildings were burned. The principal losses are:

Strotman building and tenants, 1500,000; Root & Keating, $2,500,000; the tenants, 600,000; S. S. Jewett & Co., $200,000; the Brozel House, 600,000; Sibley & Holmwood, $500,000; Fowler & Sons, 180,000; S. F. Kagan, liquor house, 400,000; the Arlington Hotel, 200,000; A. T. Kerr & Co., 130,000; A. Bert's sample room, 110,000; Lenard's hardware store, 60,000; T. V. Reynolds, boots and shoes, 125,000; Swift & Stambaek, $150,000; A. Bert, 110,000; Sidney Shepherd, hardware, 140,000; Sibley & Holmwood, 112,000.

Common Council Proceedings.

The common council held their regular monthly meeting in the council chamber last Monday evening, every member of the body being in his seat.

The following petition was received from the business men's association:

"At a regular meeting of the business men's association held Jan. 22-nd, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved That in the sense of the B. M. A. that the common council should take steps to secure a suitable hospital for the care of persons suffering with contagious diseases.

A. L. NOBLE, Sec'y pro tem. On motion of AM. Allmenduiier, the finance committee were instructed to report at the next meeting of the council what funds, if any, are available for the creation of a hospital for contagious diseases.

A petition was received from Michael Stabler and 35 others, asking that a continuation of West Third-st. be opened up from West Washington st. to West Huron-st. Referred to general street committee.

The finance committee reported, the auditing of bills upon the following funds, and warrants were ordered drawn for the same:

Table with 2 columns: Fund Name and Amount. Includes First ward fund, Third ward fund, Fourth ward fund, etc.

Total, $1738 33. The finance committee reported bills of Hutzell & Co., for $1419, D. N. Gates, $1,50, and James Tolbert, $1,08, and an allowance of $10 to each of the 57 members of the fire department.

The council threw out the bill of Koch & Haller for furniture and bedding furnished to Mrs. MiMahon for that ordered destroyed by the board of health. This is the same bill that was thrown out by the board of supervisors, but as the account legally belongs to the county, the council repudiates it.

Aid. Miller presented the question of creating a regular paid fire department with proper equipments, which is now becoming an absolute necessity. After discussing the standing of the fire department at present and its needs, and as the present department is in a demoralized condition, Aid. Allmendinser presented a resolution authorizing the chairman of the fire committee and the chief engineer of the fire department to hire such men and horses as may be necessary for the next 60 days.

The city treasurer submitted an incomplete report, showing balances on hand as follows:

Aid. Wires offered a resolution instructing the city attorney to draw up an ordinance prohibiting the posting of bills and bill boards on all trees, fences, sidewalks, public parks, etc. The resolution was adopted.

Aid. Allmendinger explained that the Luther James estate contested the claim of the city for taxes and that commissioners had been appointed to bear the case. Of these commissioners, one is James L. Gilbert, who is opposed to the city, and another is H. M. Wood, an employee of the James estate. The following resolution was adopted by the council:

Whereas, one of the commissioners appointed for settling claims against the estate of Luther James has recently and emphatically expressed an opinion with regard to the claim against said estate for the taxes due the city; another commissioner is largely interested in the settlement of the estate; and whereas, this fact precludes the city from having the fair and impartial hearing which the claim deserves and to which all claims are entitled;

Therefore resolved, that the city attorney is hereby instructed to petition the Judge of Probate for the appointment of two new commissioners for the hearing of the city's claim, who shall be unbiased and impartial men in place of James L. Gilbert and H. M. Wood.

Fiction « Today. For some time past the fashionable tendency has been largely in the direction of a conscious, not to say willful, thinness of narrative material. The old merits of fullness and "body" virtues apparently hereditary in that lineage of robust minds which can be traced backward without a break from George Eliot to Fielding—have been growing rarer and rarer. In their place the art of making a very little go a very long way has been carefully cultivated by undoubtedly dexterous hands. Fiction has almost reached the point of sheer bravado in some developments of the "society" novel, notably a species grown in American soil, or rather in New York conservatories and forcing beds, and distinguished by an elaborate triviality which no amount of cleverness can render other than rapid. Such a fashion can never in the nature of things be long lived. Those miracles of inexhaustible nothingness, in which the tiniest rivulet of incident just trickles across a conr "f dialogue, cannot long be in -ig, even as miracles, in an age to which the miraculous does not make a permanently successful appeal.—Fortnightly Review.

Good and Had Taste. Don't put your initials or your name over everything you possess, so that people who pick up a fork or look at a pillow sham will read, "John Brown, r property." It's all right to mark thin of use in some such a way, but n things of beauty, and if you must, mark them make the letters small and put them on the back of the objects, not the front. The woman who wears her initials in diamonds on a brooch is vulgar. The man who prints his monogram on his china does a useless thing, for nobody is going to run away with his dishes. Don't be too showy and complex. Don't make your napkin rings too emphatic and obtrusive. Put flowers on the table, but place them loosely or in glass, for if you put them in china or any other opaque substance you conceal half their beauty—namely, their 6tems. Don't entirely cover your wall with pictures, and when you have a picture don't let the shop keeper kill it with a big gold frame. Just as the train was starting from the station here, it came out upon the car platform to get ice from the ice-box, and as he stooped over, his feet slipped upon the snow, and he pitched head foremost right over the box to the ground. Before he could gather himself tip, the train had gone and left him, and he came back to the station, his face as white as the apron and paper cap he wore. Amos Lohr and a young relative from the south, have spent several winters alone in the handsome brick residence occupied by his father's family previous to their removal to Ann Arbor. Miss Emma R. Kempf and pupils in the Mills district, gave a very pleasant entertainment last Friday afternoon consisting of songs, recitations, dialogues, and a rather witty discussion between six of the older pupils on the question "Resolved, that summer is a pleasanter time than winter." The stories of Evangeline and Miles Siandish were reproduced and recited, the former by Miss Maude Hastings, the latter by Miss Fanny Van Gieson. The "doll show" was very unique and pretty, in which eight little girls responded to the following notice printed on the black board: "Baby show at three o'clock. Is your baby Handsome? Then bring it, for it may get the prize," and they appeared, each with her dolly, from the comic little black one, the rag one, up to the elaborately dressed "Flora McFlimsy," each setting forth in pretty rhyme her doll's good qualities, and claiming for it the prize. There were other very excellent recitations, and the presence of so many of the patrons of the school was encouraging both to teacher and to pupils. The following are the names upon the roll of honor for January: Clara East, Tommie East, Willie East, Clara Hugs, Carrie Jedele, Edwin Jedele, Charlotte Jedele, Edwin Kempf, John Mair, Laura Mills, William Seyfried, Eddie Jedele.

Gentlemen—I can cheerfully and truthfully say that S. S. S. is the greatest blood purifier on earth. In 1884 I contracted blood poison. Physicians treated me with no good results. I took a half dozen different kinds of blood medicines, but, without receiving any permanent relief! I was induced to try S. S. S. I began the first bottle with the gravest doubts of success. It had been so often deceived. But improvement came, and I continued its use until perfectly well. I have since married, and have a healthy family. No trace of the disease is seen. Swift's Specific did all this for me, and I am grateful. Yours truly,

The symptoms of Biliousness are unhappily but too well known. They differ in different individuals to some extent. A bilious man is seldom a breakfast eater. Too frequently, alas, he has an excellent appetite for liquors, but none for solids, of a morioug. His tongue will hardly bear inspection at any time; if it is not white and furred, it is rough, at all events.
The digestive system is wholly out of order and Diarrhea or Constipation may be a symptom, or the two may alternate. There are often Hemorrhoids or even IHS of blood. There may be giddiness and often headache and acidity or flatulence and tenderness in the pit of the stomach. LOVE AND BALLOONING, Escaping One Peril Only to Fully Encounter Another.

"No," said the scientist, reflectively, to a bevy of girls who were watching the inflation of a monster balloon, in which a daring "Champion of Aerial Navigation" was to ascend to a great altitude, and descend by means of a parachute. "No; neither are of modern invention."

"Who first thought of them?" queried Belle Chalmers, a saucy, black-eyed lass, who delighted in "poking fun" at the gray-haired old student.

"The Montgolfier brothers, of Lyons, France, are entitled to the honor of a first success, though," with a merry twinkle in his eyes, "it is recorded that one Icarus, son of Daedalus—"

"What horrid names!" "Incurred the anger of Minos, King of Crete, and to escape his vengeance, fastened a pair of wings upon his shoulders with—hum, perhaps beeswax, and flew away."

"Then he is entitled to the honor and not the Mont-something brothers." "Scarcely, for he came to grief. Venturing too near the sun, the adhesive preparation melted, and Icarus came tumbling down through space."

"And was killed?" sympathetically. "Unquestionably," sarcastically.

"I never heard of it before, professor." "Very likely, as it happened about 1425 B. C.," replied the old man, with a dry cough. Then he continued:

"In 1797 one Andrew Jacques Garnsriin in Paris descended some 6000 feet by means of a parachute."

"Alive, professor?" "Yes, but upon trying it again was maimed for life. The next attempt was by one Robert Crocker at Vauxhall Garden, London, in 1837."

"Did he succeed?" "In being dashed to pieces. By the way, Miss Curiosity, the verdict of the coroner's jury in the case was curious," and he read from a book filled with memoranda:

"We find that the deceased, Robert Crocker, came to his death casually, and by misfortune, in consequence of receiving divers severe injuries upon the earth in falling from a parachute of his own invention and contrivance, appended to a balloon, and we farther add that the parachute was moving toward the death of the deceased, and is therefore dead and forfeit to the Queen."

"A very lucid explanation, I have no doubt, professor, though I haven't the slightest idea what it means," laughed Belle; "but who next tempted fate and broke his neck?"

"For about fifty years the matter appears to have rested. Then 'Professor' Baldwin demonstrated the practicability of such descents, and astonished the world. For the inflation he uses either coal gas or hydrogen generated from water by the vitrolific process, and—"

"Please don't indulge in any scientific jargon," exclaimed Belle, holding up her dainty hands as to ward off an avalanche of big words. "The verdict came very near killing me, and a learned explanation would complete the murder."

"Well, then, Miss Ignorance, he goes up—I think he has been considerably over a mile—detaches his parachute and comes down—"

"With a rush?" "Probably, but you wouldn't fall so fast, young lady."

"Why?" with questioning eyes as well as voice. "Because vanity is proverbially light," and having had his revenge, the old man passed on to another group to air his erudition.

"Meanwhile the balloon was expanding its huge folds, and straining at the restraining ropes, with a gaping crowd watching the fastening of trapeze bar and parachute.

The arrangements were superintended by a somewhat fine and determined-looking young man, who soon became known as the daring aeronaut. With Belle Chalmers he was evidently well acquainted, for he lingered by her side, chatted familiarly, and her rising color told that his words might have a deeper interest for her than others understood.

"No, Miss Chalmers," he said, in answer to a question, "danger has been reduced to a minimum. Study and experimental science have become its master. At least while flying through the air there is little to fear, and about all one has to guard against is landing."

"It must be glorious, must be a thrilling sensation, to become as a bird," she said, glowing with enthusiasm.

"Yes, it is an almost breathless swing, and—" he hesitated. Then seeing that his companions had passed beyond hearing, he continued: "It would be the crowning glory of my life, Belle, to have you with me for even a single trip."

"But not for life?" she questioned, archly, as she flashed the black diamond light of her beautiful eyes upon him.

"You know what I mean, dear. The other has been already promised."

"Hush! That secret is as yet known only to our hearts," and she glanced around as if fearful he had been overheard.

"And faithfully will I keep it as I will tenderly keep you. But as regards my other wish, Belle?"

"About things would I like to go, that is, for a little distance. My heart would fail if venturing very far, as it does when I lose sight of you in the clouds."

"That would be very easy. Before I go upon my Bremei night I will make a little as-cion'on, having the balloon fastened to the earth by ropes. Many ladies have done so."

"Have they, indeed? Let me catch you taking one again, sir?" and she shook her fingers with playful threatening.

"Jealous!" he laughed. "Go with me, then, and learn what a rare place it is for love-making."

"If lean." "The difficulty Belle had in gaining the consent of her parents ('old fogies,' she disrespectfully called them) to making 'such an exhibition of herself,' even her most intimate girl friends knew nothing about. And though there was great comment when the fact was learned that she was 'going up in a balloon,' yet all agreed that she looked—the men 'divine,' and the unenvious of the girls 'just too lovely for anything,' when she appeared.

As to dress she wore a Bloomer costume of blue cloth, daintily fashioned, and edged and braided with white braid, with her black curls hanging loosely from under a jaunty little cap and long white plume, her cheeks as Jacquiminot roses, and her eyes twinkling as stars.

Had she been anticipating the trip for months, she could not have been better prepared. At least the lover thought so, but gave no expression to his surprise beyond lifting his eyebrows and a peculiar smile, which Belle answered by a saucy elevation of nose naturally and decidedly reticent.

With every thing ready she stepped into the basket of the balloon, cheered by the waiting hundreds, and soared as some monster bird, not far from one who was accustomed to be lost among the clouds, but very high for one who never before had ventured to thus leave the earth.

"It is grand! It is glorious, this freedom of motion and breath!" she exclaimed, in the fullness of her happiness.

"And gives you, Belle, a trifle of the feeling one has at an altitude where every thing you now see is lost to the eye; when breathing is difficult and the brain becomes dizzy. It would not care to go higher. As it is, I am awed, nay, my very soul shudders at a realization of the infinite, as I never dreamed of before."

"We will not go higher. As long as you please we will drift about here, then descend."

"What if an accident should happen? Oh, if the rope should break and we shoot upward!" and he felt the hand resting within his tremble, and suddenly become as ice.

"No danger of that," he answered, with a re-assuring smile. "But probably we had better descend. You are becoming too nervous; too much terrified for enjoyment."

"Wait yet a little. It is an experience I shall never forget, and I would have it last as long as possible."

"I remember well when I felt as you do, Belle, though it is commonplace now, and—"

"Merciful Heaven! what does this sudden shooting up, this outcry, mean?" and the roses of her cheeks were blanched with horror.

He knew but too well, needed not to be told that the balloon had become loosened. And knowing as well that the life he loved more than his own hung upon prompt action, he was not slow of decision.

"Belle," he said, taking both of her hands within his own, "you are a brave girl, and must do as I direct, or Heaven alone knows what the consequence will be."

"What must I do?" was questioned in a hoarse, strained voice.

"Must descend my means of a parachute or—"

"I can not—can not. Rather would I die with you."

At another time such a confession would have been the sweetest of earth. Now it nearly drove him to madness. Yet still keeping command of himself, he answered:

"Keep up your courage, little girl, and all will be well. Grasp the handles thus, and in an instant you will be in the arms waiting to receive you."

The parachute was ready. He had secured her against falling by fastening her to it with a rope, knotted around her waist; had opened the valves and permitted the gas to escape and the balloon to fall as low as possible, without endangering the glossy silken folds. Then drawing her to him he kissed the girl again and again, told her there was no danger, and realizing it to be her only chance, launched her into the air. Against tears and entreaties, with force that would scarcely be called gentle, it was done, and as she shot down, he felt that his heart went with her, and that if any thing serious happened to her it would break.

Those below saw the coming of an immense blue bird and cage; at first very fast; then slower. With open arms they waited; with swiftness opening pulses they reached upward, and when Belle Chalmers came within reach she was quickly seized upon, and, half fainting, she was carried in triumph to her distressed parents.

It was a mighty shout that went up when she was rescued, and no ears welcomed it more gladly than those of the aeronaut. True, his own life was in danger, but what of that? Little, however, he gave to the fact that when a few hours later he sat by the girl of his heart, with the trials through which they had passed making each a thousand fold more dear to the other.

"So he is safe," was the comment of one of the bright-eyed girls who had listened to the learned disquisition of the professor.

"Safe?" laughed another, with a spiteful tossing of her long curls. "Safe? I don't know about that; isn't he going to marry Belle Chalmers?" —Yankee Blade.

In Kvar's 'Crisper Vein.

Senator Everts sat at command a sententious humor that is rarely hinted at in such of his oblong periods as are most familiar to the public. A correspondent says that he remarked of Rhode Island that it was settled by the Dutch; the Yankees settled the Dutch; and of certain Christians who landed in New England: "They praised God and fell on their knees—then they fell upon the aborigines." The ex-Secretary also sent to Bancroft this letter:

"DEAR BANCROFT: I am very glad to send you two products of my pen to-day—a barrel of pickled pig pork and my obituary on Chief Justice Chase. Yours EVABTS."

Tipping the Hat.

The custom of lifting the hat had its origin during the age of chivalry, when it was customary for knights never to appear in public except in full armor. It became a custom, however, for a knight, upon entering an assembly of friends, to remove his helmet, signifying: "I am safe in the presence of my friends." The age of chivalry passed away with the fifteenth century, but among the many acts of courtesy which can be traced back to its influence none is more direct in its origin than that of lifting the hat to acknowledge the presence of a friend.

UTE BILL'S PARTNER.

Half way up the mountain which overshadows Cheyenne canyon is a rude log cabin of only two rooms.

Many years ago, when reports of the finding of gold drew men from every state in the Union, there appeared in this grand but desolate canyon a man by the name of Rivers—Stanley Rivers, he said—who at once proceeded to erect a cabin for himself. This completed, he kept well within its walls when not actually engaged in prospecting. He located his claim and went about it as readily as an old miner.

The little town of Colorado Springs, four miles distant, was often visited by the miners when they had accumulated a little dust, but Rivers had never accompanied them on these occasional spees, although they had often urged him to do so.

A man in a mining camp who does not drink is considered, as a general thing, beneath the notice of the average miner, but it was not so in this case. Here he had the confidence and respect of the rough men gathered around him, and by his gentle ways, boyish face and pleading blue eyes, had won every man over to his side.

They no longer urged him to go with them; they went, and respected him. There was not a man in all the camps around who would not have taken the part of the "tenderfoot," as they jocularly called him. And not only that, he knew it.

His past was a blank, and he mildly resented all efforts to reveal it. On one occasion Ute Bill had pressed him too closely on the subject, and he reproved him by saying:

"Bill, I think you are a friend of mine, but I would rather have you throw me down that shaft of yours than ask me to tell you my past life. It is too painful."

If the boys could have seen Bill then; if they could have looked upon him as he stood, abashed before this slender, pale looking young man; he, who had killed his man; this "Indian chawer," who had come out ahead in a hand to hand fight with a bear; this same Ute Bill, who figured as a desperado in the country round for a hundred miles, they would have wondered if he had suddenly taken leave of his senses.

But they were alone, and in an humble voice he said:

"Beg yer pardon, Mister Rivers, I didn't mean to hurt yer feelin's. I hev kinder taken a liken to ye, a sort of fatherly interest, and if ye say the word we'll be pard."

The word was said, and great was the surprise in camp when the new partnership was announced the next day. What had come over Bill? Was he going to reform? It was a seven days' wonder, but gradually died away until it was no longer an attraction to see Bill's six feet of muscle and brawn towering head and shoulders above his delicate looking "pard" as they prospected the country.

One day in their wanderings they found they had nearly reached the summit of the grand old peak at whose base flowed the waters of the San Juan creek, when Bill suddenly uttered an exclamation of amazement.

"Look here, pard, we've struck it this time; chunks of it!"

Rivers, who had been patiently clipping specimens off the ledges which jutted out here and there, hastened to his side, and he handed him a piece of dark looking rock in his hand, and was turning it excitedly over and over, his eyes glowing like stars in his intense excitement.

The news spread like wildfire through the camp. All the miners were half crazy over the find, and deserted their old claims to search for new ones. There was no doubt of the vast wealth that lay in the mine which Bill and Rivers had opened. It was a settled fact that the men had more money than they could ever realize beaming down on them as the mining ore should be turned out.

As the two men were lying on their rough beds in the little cottage they talked of the future and its grand prospects. Bill was full of enthusiasm, and pictured in glowing terms his highest ambitions, to be realized when he should count his thousands.

He would be a congressman. What thrilling speeches he would make. He would have every word of them printed in the newspapers. He would own a fast horse, and the "boys" should have all the drinks they wanted; they should not go dry while he was on to) of 60d. And he stopped suddenly and looked at his companion.

"What's yer lead, ole pard? Will yer hang onto yer dust, or spend it like yer gut?"

"For a moment Rivers was silent. "I don't no think what disposition I shall make of it. I will probably go back east. My plans are not definitely settled," he finally answered. So the subject was dropped.

Bill knew the quiet, retiring man at his side well enough to know all inquiries to be fruitless. So he turned over, and after a few more words about the work of the morrow, he fell asleep.

When the morning dawned Bill was up and stirring. Rivers slept late, and at last Bill thought he had better awaken him. As he shook him in his rough way he noticed the bright spots on Rivers' cheeks and his short, irregular breathing.

"It is all right now, Lillian," murmured the sick man, tossing uneasily; "it's all right now. I've got the money to keep you where you should be." So tenderly, pathetically came the words that the rough miner brushed away the tears as he listened to the hidden story of his "pard's" past life. He told it all in his delirium, and seemed to live the long years over; how he had loved this delicate girl, reared in luxury and ease, and when he lost the fortune he had so slowly accumulated he dared not tell her of his love. He would not ask her to share his poverty and hardships. He had come away and staked his life and love in the search for gold, and found it. Yes, now he could clasp her slender hand in his and give her all the riches he possessed in return. Over and over again he called her name.

Bill softly stroked the brown hair from his forehead, and as he did so Rivers said: "It is so soft—her little hand—it rests me to feel it on my head." And he lapsed again into a restless sleep.

"Durn that big paw!" said BILL, looking at his rough, brawny hand, and then at the white forehead on the pillow.

"And ther ain't a woman's hand in the camp to fix things easy for him. I'd give the hull bizness if he was only out of this muss."

But before two hours had elapsed there was a doctor from Colorado Springs bending over the sick man, and by the bedside sat a pale, slender girl, watching with intense interest every motion and word of the patient, and soothing him with her little hands holding his. She came with the doctor. Bill stood inside the door, and looked like a bashful schoolboy in the presence of this stranger, who seemed to be taking his place and caring for Rivers when he ought to be doing so. But he asked no questions, and waited for the doctor's answer.

"Just keep the camp quiet, Bill, and Miss Lancaster will give the medicine and see to the rest. He is worn out with excitement, and a little quiet, with good nursing, will make things right. If the fever is no better in six hours let me know." And that was all the explanation Bill got from the doctor.

Was she a professional nurse? Bill guessed so. And he thought how nice it would be if he could be sick when Rivers got well.

The camp was still—Bill had ordered it so—and every man asked how the "tenderfoot" was, and about the "gal."

"Dunno," was all the answer they got to the latter question, and Bill told all he knew when he said that.

Rivers was in a serious condition, and before the six hours were up a horseman dashed out of camp and after a doctor. It was Ute Bill. He could not stand by and see him toss back and forth in bed. It was too much. He wasn't used to it. The doctor had to make another trip—Bill said Rivers was worse.

When the doctor had made an examination of his patient he declared the worst was passed, and left Rivers sleeping quietly under a gentle narcotic.

All this time the girl had not released her watch by the bedside, and she seemed to be soothing away the delirium of the fever in gently passing her hands over the sick man's temples. Her eyes never left off their watch of every movement of the "tenderfoot's" face, and Bill stood by wonderingly, casting a furtive glance at the delicately featured face bending over his pard's pillow, and trying to solve the problem in his mind.

Hours passed, and finally, with a long sigh, Rivers opened his eyes and looked at Bill leaning over the foot of the bed. Then his wandering attention was fixed on the anxious face by his side. There was no glad cry of recognition—it was a mutual understanding. All the warmth of his great love was expressed in the gently whispered name "Lillian," as he drew her face to his. Resting her head on his shoulders, she told him of the long years of waiting for tidings from him and the hasty letter from Omaha, which she had only received a few days before. She had left home, friends, everything, and gone to seek him in the wild west, she knew not where, but she had found him. And Bill had disappeared.

A few days afterward one of the "pards" gave up his claim to the little cabin, and the minister said the ceremony, which linked two lives into a world of their own.

Many and hearty were the rough congratulations. That evening the miners gathered at the little home to say a word of welcome to the beautiful young bride. Even if it were spoken by a big, rowdy miner like Bill, there was a genuine ring of manliness about it, and made her feel quite at home in the wild, picturesque spot so far from every sign of civilization. As the men filed out slowly Rivers conducted his girl wife to the porch of the rude cabin, and, standing close by his side, she sang one verse of "Home, Sweet Home."

The tender, sympathetic voice fell on the still night air with a wonderful sweetness, and awakened many old memories in the hearts of the rough, coarse miners gathered there.

Heads were uncovered and there were tears wiped hastily away as Bill led them to the saloon. Was there rough talking and coarse jests now? No. As each man raised his glass a solemn hush fell upon the group, broken at last by Ute Bill's voice. It was choked and unnatural.

"Boys," he said, "I never hed but one pard, but I give him up to the best pard a man ever got. And I'll never hev another till I get one like his."

Bill set his glass down and walked away abruptly. It was not long until the saloon was deserted and the camp hushed in the repose of night.

After that Bill did not seem like his old self. He was quiet and solemn. He knew what was the matter, but did not care to let the boys know where the sunshine had fallen on his rough heart and then so suddenly been swept away.

The next spring came, and the doctor made another trip to the little cabin. When Ute Bill went up the next day Rivers led him into the dainty bedroom and gave him a peep at the tiny baby girl that had come that night. The big rough hand closed tightly over the one of a more delicate mold that was laid in his, and the two men understood each other. There were tears in Bill's eyes and an ache in his heart which no one but Rivers should ever know as he turned silently away.

The miners gathered again in the saloon to drink to the health of the mother and child, and hear Bill, now glowing with animation, tell about the baby and its queer ways until they all wanted to see the youngster. A vote was taken, and the camp was to be christened after the baby, and Bill had forgotten to ask her name. Away he went, and soon returned, he looked sheepish and finally came forward and said:

"Boys, yer got me this time. They've called her 'Ufella' as near my name as they could get, and it's my layout. What'll ye hev?"

The classes clinked merrily, and Mr. Bill beamed with happiness.

Not a day passed that Bill did not visit the cottage, and as the wee babe grew to a toddling, lisping girl, Bill was her chief sympathizer, and the boys in camp at last called him "Uncle Bill."

"There's no harm in me lovin' her," he said one day as he stroked the curly brown head nestled against his breast; "the other wasn't for me." And Rivers glanced up quickly at Bill, and then to his wife, who was sitting by the doorway with her dainty fingers busy in mending a little frock.

"It was before I knew"—and Bill swallowed the big lump rising in his throat and tried to go on, but his voice broke and he trembled in the vain effort to suppress his emotion. Rising suddenly he left the cabin.

That was years ago. The mining camp has disappeared and only the lonely cottage marks the spot where it once stood. Stanley Rivers lives with his wife and dark eyed girl in an eastern city and enjoys the wealth he made in the picturesque spot which now bears the name of Cheyenne canyon. Bill never married; he loved the beautiful girl who sat by the bedside of his sick pard; he loved the tiny babe who played upon his knees and laid her soft cheek against his own. And when he died they found a little faded shoe which contained a slip of paper. It only said: "Give all my dust to my pard's baby." And Ute Bill, the roughest miner in the camp, was buried near the little cottage in Cheyenne canyon.—New York Star.
