

THE ANN ARBOR REGISTER

VOL. XV. NO. 31.

ANN ARBOR, MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, AUGUST 1 1889.

WHOLE NO. 762.

OUR NEW PROFESSORS.

LET US INTRODUCE THEM.

Brief Biographical Sketches of Drs. Farrow, Wancrede, Freer, Howell, Mack and Gatchell.—The men appointed to Places in the Faculty of the Two medical Departments.

The regents at their last meeting appointed four new professors in the medical college and two new ones in the homeopathic college. These men have all accepted and will soon remove to this city. They are, without exception, men of national reputation, although but little known outside of medical circles in this city, and THE REGISTER has prepared a brief biographical sketch of each.

at present a resident of Bay City, takes the place made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Frothingham. In character, attainments and experience he is peculiarly adapted to the work which will be expected at his hands. He was born in the southern part of Maryland in 1852, and was a boisterous, healthy, light hearted boy, showed a marked aptitude in his studies, was strong of mind and body, took pleasure alike in sports and study, appropriated the advantage of his early life in a way to give promise of his future success, and then, because of the war which unsettled affairs at his boyhood home, went to the northern part of the state where he fitted himself for college. He entered the Dickinson seminary in 1867 and completed the classical course with honors four years later. His desire to enter upon a study of medicine was gratified and he was particularly fortunate in finding an instructor in Doctor W. R. Bullock whom he professed to recall as the translator of Cazeaux's obstetrics, a voluminous and exhaustive work that has so long been an authority upon the subject which it treats. He became a full fledged graduate in medicine at Washington in March, 1874. Determined that the foundation of his professional knowledge should be laid broad and deep, the physician went abroad and for eight years added knowledge and the most judicious experience to his existing attainments. He had the benefit of learning and observation at London, Paris, Vienna and Berlin, going thence to Canton, China, where for several years he had charge of the practical work in the hospital of that city, in which surgical cases of all kinds could be found, during the last year of the time being consul under appointment of President Garfield.

The health of Dr. Carrow's wife being seriously affected by the climate, he returned to the United States and settled at Bay City in 1884, going conscientiously at work and has built up a reputation as well as a practice worth $5,000 a year. His successes as an oculist have been little short of phenomenal and give promise of future accomplishments even greater. He is a handsome, scholarly, cultured gentleman, sympathetic and loyal to his calling, a man of action and a prize to the state university.

who succeeds Dr. Maclean as professor of surgery and clinical surgery, hails from Philadelphia. He graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1869, and from the Jefferson Medical College a few years later. During his professional life he has held many positions which have brought him out as a capable teacher as well as a learned man. The positions which he has held at different times during the past few years are as follows: Lecturer at the University of Pennsylvania; senior surgeon to the Protestant Episcopal hospital and to St. Christopher's hospital; surgeon to and lecturer on clinical surgery at the Jefferson Medical College hospital; lecturer on surgery at Darnmouth Medical College; professor of general and orthopedic surgery in Philadelphia Polly clinic.

Dr. Nacrede has made a large number of valuable contributions to medical journals and medical literature. He is author of a standard work, "Essentials of Anatomy," and has contributed to the "International Encyclopedia of Surgery," "Wood's Handbook of Medical Science," and "Encyclopedia of Women's Diseases."

Dr. Nacrede is a member of nearly all the medical societies of Europe, and has but recently been elected corresponding member of the Royal Academy of Medicine of Rome. He is about 45 years old and a valuable addition to the medical faculty.

DR. CHARLES S. MACK.

of Chicago, has been chosen to fill the position in the homeopathic faculty made vacant by the resignation of Prof. Arndt. He is a man below the middle age and has had the advantage of excellent college and medical training. He graduated from Phillips Exeter academy and took his B. S. degree at Harvard, after which he graduated in medicine at the University of New York. He served two years as house surgeon on the staffs of Mt. Sinai and Emergency hospitals in New York, and was a member of the New York board of health, to which position he was appointed after a rigid examination by the Civil Service Reform Bureau in competition with 40 others. Soon afterwards he moved to Boston and spent three years in practice there, going thence to Chicago where he has been one of the most successful of homeopathic practitioners. Dr. Mack is a man of fine figure, a hard worker and a brilliant talker.

J. W. FREER, PH. D., M. D.

who takes the chair of general chemistry formerly filled by Prof. Langley, is a son of the former president of Rush Medical College, and is, himself, a graduate of that institution. He then pursued his studies at Munich, Germany, and took the Ph. D. degree from the University of Munich. He did brilliant work in chemistry and was exceptionally commended by his professors there. His work in this branch attracted the notice of the British Scientific Association and he was requested to read a paper before that body, an honor seldom conferred upon so young a man. He has done considerable fine work in original research. He is but 28 years old and the call of so young a man to this important chair, teaching as he will be called upon to do a large number of students in both the literary and medical departments, marks out a new policy of the regents in attracting to the faculty brilliant young men.

who returns to Ann Arbor from Chicago, to fill the chair of theory and practice in the homeopathic department which he occupied in '78, '79 and '80, is not unknown here. He comes from a family of doctors, his father and several brothers being practitioners of the healing art. After leaving Ann Arbor in 1880, Dr. Gatchell settled at Chicago where he has worked up a successful practice. He is a lecturer on the Cook county hospital staff, and at present is president of the homeopathic part of the staff.

He has engaged extensively in literary work and is editor of the Medical Era, a prosperous homeopathic journal. He is the author of two well-known works, one on therapeutics and the other on diathesis. Beside these he has written a novel, "Hachish," under the nom de plume of Thorat King, which has been well received.

who was appointed professor of physiology in place of Dr. Sewall, was the last to accept the position offered him, his acceptance not having been received until last Monday. Until recently he has been teaching physiology and histology at John Hopkins University. He is a man of large reputation and comes to the University of Michigan highly recommended by Dr. Martin, of John Hopkins University, and Dr. Henry Sewall, whom he succeeds.

DR. EARP'S SAD CASE.

He Give Down Under the Strain.—A Monomania for Borrowing Money Causes a Sensation in Church Circles.—Earp's Resignation takes Immediate Effect.

The public generally, and the majority of the parishioners of St. Andrews church especially, have been surprised and grieved at the reports published, during the past week in the daily press, regarding the financial transactions of Rev. Samuel Earp, who was rector of the church until last Saturday night. But what has pained the friends of Dr. Earp the most, is that these reports are in the main correct and cannot be denied. Much surprise prevailed when Dr. Earp's resignation was presented to the vestry and so promptly accepted by them. This resignation was to take effect on Nov. 10, but was amended on Saturday to take effect on Aug. 1, and was accepted as amended by the board on Saturday. Mr. H. S. Brown read the service at the meeting on Sunday morning and announced the fact that the parsonage was without a rector at present.

The work that Dr. Earp has done among the students of the Hobart Guild and as rector of St. Andrews church cannot be questioned. No rector ever gave such universal satisfaction in his church work and none have been more successful. His financial relations with the church funds and with the Hobart Guild are perfectly correct.

When Dr. Earp came to Ann Arbor four years ago, he was heavily involved, the amount being placed at from $6,000 to $10,000. To carry this amount has been an almost superhuman effort, while at the same time he was doing a great amount of work which devolves upon the rector of this parish. Both these things Mr. Earp succeeded in doing during the past four years, his work in the parish being remarkable.

Dr. Earp's indebtedness amounts at present to between $10,000 and $11,000. This large amount he has been carrying by "borrowing from Peter to pay Paul." At first he borrowed from members of the church, getting men and women indiscriminately to endorse his paper. The members began talking among themselves, and during the past two years he has borrowed of everybody that would loan him, from members of other denominations and members of no church at all. His position as rector gave him a standing where almost anybody would loan him.

Finally business men began to doubt him, and then he began going to Ypsilanti, Dexter, and other places. Whenever anybody pushed him he would hustle around and find someone else to help him out. Several widows have been on his paper and it is thought that now some of them are still endorsers and will suffer.

Mr. Earp's financial work has been known to the vestrymen for the past two years and cast considerable reflection on the church, the vestry being glad to remove this by accepting his resignation, although they all claim that he was not asked nor was it intimated that they would like the resignation.

That the vestry were aware of the facts is proven by their actions when Earp was a candidate for bishop after Bishop Harris' death. One vestryman said that at that time the vestry held a meeting and concluded to ask Earp about the miscellaneous borrowing of money and ascertain what disposition he was making of so much money, no one at the time, or even now, being aware what he was doing with money. Dr. Earp was called before them and asked regarding the matter, the vestry assuring him that if he made a satisfactory explanation they would be very glad to support him. Mr. Earp simply said he had no explanation to make and was not a candidate for bishop. This explains why the Ann Arbor delegates did not support him at the convention.

The outlook is poor for the creditors to get out whole. Some of the paper is not due yet, and what the disposition of those who hold it remains to be seen. The reputation of the church has suffered greatly from these transactions, some of them bordering on misrepresentation and impossible stories. A large amount of the notes given are now held by the Ypsilanti Savings banks, only a few hundred dollars being in the bank here.

There is no doubt but that this borrowing has been a monomania with Dr. Earp. He has often spoken of a large legacy which had fallen to him but which failed to materialize. Had he not been laboring under a delusion, he could never have stood up under the constant worry and cares of carrying such a heavy financial load for four years, and even longer, as the dispatches state that he had the same trouble in New York ten years ago. The only explanation given by Dr. Earp is that he lost by endorsing for a brother.

Dr. Earp has broken down completely since the matter became public, and was taken to the sanitarium at Battle Creek on Saturday for rest. Many expressions of sympathy are heard for Mrs. Earp and the family, who have become so popular in church and social circles during their residence here.

ZINA P. KING'S SHORTAGE.

The All-Illini Association Will Not Lose as Much as at First Reported.

For several weeks past it has been surmised that something was wrong in the financial affairs of the University Alumni Association, and this has been proven true during the past week by statements from the officers of the association that the affairs of Zina P. King, the retiring treasurer, were in a badly mixed-up condition and the directors could not tell just how he stood with the association until a thorough investigation of the books and vouchers had been made.

When Mr. King came to turn over his office to the treasurer elect, it was found that he had but little cash on hand. Mr. King immediately turned over every dollar's worth of property that he owned to the directors, to secure the association from loss. Two houses were taken at $7,300, over and above a $2,500 mortgage; mortgages for about $1,500 and other property raising the total amount to over $9,000 was placed in the directors' hands. Mr. King then gave his note for $10,400 to cover any shortage, if there should prove to be one.

The books have been loosely kept and the peculiar feature of the case is that the errors are against Mr. King and in favor of the association. He has charged himself with interest and then compounded it for the past six years. He has also failed to charge up attorney's fees paid for making collections. Mr. King should justly be paid a salary for the work done during the past ten years. When these allowances are made, it is doubtful if there will be any shortage; and if at all, it will be far below the sums reported, $10,000 to $18,000.

Mr. King has always been respected here and has served the city several times in a public capacity. He has always worked honestly for the city's interest and tie affairs in the case of the alumni association are a surprise to our citizens. It was through Mr. King's hard work, while city attorney a number of years ago, that this city was saved from being in the same condition that Ypsilanti was placed—having $150,000 worth of bonds for a railroad issued and which the city would have been obliged to pay, had not Mr. King succeeded in getting them back from the secretary of state.

There is no doubt but that Mr. King was squeezed in a stock deal in 1882-'83, and that he lost not only his own property, but other available funds, making sure, however, to save enough property of his own to be able to realize enough to meet the amount of association's funds used. The association is as much to blame as anyone else in this matter, as years there were several years that no meeting of the directors was held, although Mr. King endeavored to get them together a number of times.

Israel Hall has Passed Away.

On Tuesday evening at 5 o'clock, Israel Hall, aged 75 years, died at his residence on Washtenaw-ave., of general debility, after having passed the last few months of his life in great suffering.

Mr. Hall was born in the Green

Mountains of Vermont, and was left an orphan, without brother or sister, when but ten years of age. From that time until the day of his death, Mr. Hall was dependent upon his own resources, and the property that he amassed and his success in his business ventures places his name on the roll of successful self-made men.

Mr. Hall was engaged in the hardware business at Syracuse, N. Y., for a number of years. In 1857 he removed to Toledo, Ohio, where he became engaged in the nursery business, being known for years as the largest nurseryman in the West. After spending twelve years in Toledo, he moved to Ann Arbor and spent his declining years in rest and travel.

By the death of Mr. Hall, the city loses one of its most respected citizens, who with wealth at his command has been a true philanthropist, always ready to aid the poor and respond to a call from the suffering. After the recent catastrophe at Johnstown, Mr. Hall was the first to respond to a call for help for the sufferers by THE REGISTER, and sent his check for $100.

He leaves a widow and six children, Eugene B. and Louis P. Hall, of this city; Charles A. Hall, of Murphy, N. C.; Mrs. Mary Dubois and Mrs. Louis H. Walker, of this city, and Mrs. S. C. Eastman, of Chicago. All the family were present at the time of his death.

The funeral is to be held at the family residence on Washtenaw-ave., at six o'clock this evening. The services at the house will be public, but the burial service will be private.

Card of thanks.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wotzke wish to return thanks to the friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted them during the illness and death of their son.

Two hundred and eighty tears of improvement. In 1609, after traversing the Hudson River from its mouth to Albany, and carefully noting the grandeur and beauty on either side of this magnificent highway of nature, Hendrick Hudson wrote these words:

Two hundred and eighty years have marvelously increased the beauty of the great river called by his name, and could he return to the scenes of his manhood, he would find many more lovely sights than those upon which his eyes rested in the early part of the seventeenth century. The natural beauties of the Hudson are much the same, and no description can exaggerate them; but the magnificent steamers that ply between New York and Albany, the innumerable sailing craft that dot the surface of the mighty river, the never-ending clusters of canal boats that are being towed up and down, the beautiful villas that one encounters at every turn, the magnificent monuments, perpetuating heroic deeds, that we find here and there along the banks of this noblest river of the continent, add an endless variety to the scenery, and a resistless charm to the eye of the traveler.

The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad runs along the bank of the Hudson river the entire distance between New York and Albany, and is the great Trunk Line that connects the metropolis of the Western world with the famous health and pleasure resorts of Central, Northern and Western New York, including in its list the Catskill Mountains, Saratoga, Lake George, Sharon and Richfield Springs, Lake Ontario, the Berkshire Hills, Niagara Falls, the Thousand Islands, Lake Champlain, the River St. Lawrence, and hundreds of others.

The New York Central is a part of the great national highway across the continent, and for the beauty of its scenery, the number and importance of the cities through which it passes, its almost total lack of grades and curves, this great four-track railway is unsurpassed in Europe or America.

"Robin's Farewell," caprice for piano, by Fisher, is the very latest of recent publications of new music. Mr. Fisher has a happy faculty in writing pleasing and melodious music interesting to pupil and teacher. It is dedicated to the Sisters of Charity, who—like many other successful teachers—are using some very extensively. Mailed on receipt of 50 cents in postage stamps by Ign. Fischer, Publisher, Toledo, Ohio.

The New York Graphic speaks highly of a novel, "The Heroines of Potosega," written by Frederic Alva Dean, a member of the class of '86, U. of M. It says: "If the signs are not all wrong a new light has arisen in literature. Mr. Dean, the author of 'The Heroines of Potosega,' is a young man only entering the twenties, but he has performed here a piece of literary work of which much older and more experienced writers might be proud. He calls it a novel, but it is really a prose poem in which there are nights of pictorial description that glow with the fervor of the tropics and again attain to heights of imaginative horror that are almost marvelous in their ingenuity."

When Mr. Kennan saw the Armfeds family at the Mines of Kara, which he is now describing in the Century, he promised that he would call upon Count Leo Tolstoy, upon his return to Russia, and describe to him their life and circumstances. As is already well known, Count Tolstoy is opposed to every form of force, and when Mr. Kennan saw him many months later, he manifested a decided inclination to listen to accounts of the sufferings of the political convicts in Eastern Siberia. He stated that while he felt sorry for many of the politicals, he could not help them and was not at all in sympathy with their methods. They had resorted, he said, to violence, and they must expect to suffer from violence.

A genuine midsummer number is the Century for August, with its opening article on "The Stream of Pleasure—the 'Eiver Thames,' by the Pennells—husband and wife—who have written about and minutely pictured that gay and thronged resort of boats and boaters.

Mrs. Foote's "Afternoon at a Ranch" has also a midsummer air, and all inland vacationists will find matter of interest in Dr. Weir Mitchell's profusely illustrated article on "The Poisons of Serpents,"—a line of inquiry in which he has made important discoveries. Remington, artist and writer, describes with pen and pencil his outing with the Cheyennes; and a group of well-known wood-engravers—French, Kingsly, Closson, and Davis—describe in their own language, and with drawings and engravings by each, a wood-engraver's camp on the Connecticut River, as well as the methods of the American school of wood-engraving.

The time to get ready the old-fashioned apparatus makes it utterly impossible for a teacher in a public school to use it. Again, the time required for the manipulation of it in the class, causes the pupil's mind to wander to other thoughts than that of the principle which is to be illustrated. Add to this the fact that home-made apparatus is so suggestive of scientific principles that, while the student is making it, his mind is constantly learning something new, and we have ground for the statement that home-made apparatus economizes time sufficiently to make it practicable to teach science experimentally in the public schools.

Perhaps the chief argument in favor of home-made apparatus is what might be called the manual-training argument—i. e., the argument of its educational value to the student who constructs it. It is always noticeable that the student who makes his own apparatus is not only liable to get a better comprehension of the principles which it illustrates, but his mind is thereby stimulated to inquire into many kindred principles.—Prof. John F. Woodhull, in the Popular Science Monthly for August.

Scribner's Magazine for August is a most seasonable issue, containing spirited out door papers on the game of lawn tennis and on tarpon fishing; two papers on Tennyson, whose eightieth birthday is thus commemorated; short stories, by H. H. Boyesen, Brander Matthews, George Parsons Lathrop, and E. C. Martin, a new writer, and valuable additions to the Electric and Railway series.

"Form in Lawn Tennis," by James Wright, M. D.—a very high authority—treats of the game from an entirely new point of view, using instantaneous photographs of the Sears Brothers and Pettitt, three noted players, as the basis of a more accurate analysis of the principal strokes in the game than has been heretofore possible.

Robert Grant, who is an expert sportsman as well as a writer of fiction, has written an enthusiastic paper on "Tarpon Fishing in Florida," in which he describes a trip recently made by him to St. James City, Florida.

The end paper by Professor T. R. Lounsbury, on "The Two Locksley Jails," is a sympathetic and discriminating presentation of Tennyson's attitude toward life in youth and in old age. It is preceded by a brief paper on "Tennyson's First Flight."

"How to Feed a Railway" is the attractive title under which Benjamin Norton, second vice-president of the Long Island railway, describes the purchasing and supply department of a large railway system.

This issue contains four complete short stories, by Brander Matthews, H. H. Boyesen, E. C. Martin, and George Parsons Lathrop, the last named writing a tale of the future entitled, "The New Poverty," which should interest the many readers of Mr. Bellamy's "Looking Backward."

A "Put and Call."

This is a funny phrase to the uninitiated, but all the brokers understand it. They use it when a person gives a certain per cent, for the option of buying or selling stock on a fixed day, at a price stated on the day the option is given. It is often a serious operation to the dealer, but there is a more serious "put and call" than this: when you are "put" to bed with a severe cold and your friends "call" a physician. Avoid all this by keeping in the house Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The great cure for pulmonary and blood diseases. Its action is marvelous. It cures the worst cough, whether acute, lingering, or chronic. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Short Breath, Consumption, Night-sweats, and kindred affections, it surpasses all other medicines.

The Egyptians had shoes or sandals made ordinarily of leather, but sometimes of palm leaves or papyrus.

"A Word to the Wise Is Sufficient."

Catarrh is not simply an inconvenience, unpleasant to the sufferer and disgusting to others—it is an advanced outpost of approaching disease of worse type. Do not neglect its warning; it brings deadly evils in its train. Before it is too late, use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It reaches the seat of the ailment, and is the only thing that will. You may dose yourself with quack medicines till it is too late—till the streamlet becomes a resistless torrent. It is the matured invention of a scientific physician. EXAMINE BEFORE YOU BUY.

WHEN in a grocer's store you stand And cakes of IVORY SOAP demand, Be careful not to be misled And imitations take instead, For dealers oft will praise sing Of that which may more profit bring. Let not your senses clouded be Because a snowy cake you see, For villainy is not confined To darkest colors, bear in mind. And oft the sham is not remote From fairest face or whitest coat. Examine well with careful eye The cake until the name you spy, And always thus be well assured That IVORY SOAP you have procured: And should a lingering doubt remain, 'Twill vanish like the darkest stain. When in the tub on washing day That cake of soap is brought in play.

THE communication from L. M. which appears in another column contains some very sensible ideas about lawn fences. The writer evidently has taken the right view of the subject. Judging from the new and attractive iron fences which are being put about the city, there are not a few who are of the same mind as our correspondent.

CINCINNATI police have long been the willing tools of the saloon keepers and other toughs of that city. Last Sunday they in a measure redeemed themselves by quite thoroughly enforcing the law ordering the saloons closed on that day. Such senseless determination to openly defy the laws of the state as was shown by the saloon men of Cincinnati should be summarily dealt with. A few years' imprisonment and a confiscation of all one's property for such offenses would have a wholesome effect.

NOT a few people were greatly surprised to learn of the Earp complication. What shall we expect next? Those who knew Mr. Earp best are inclined to believe that in financial matters he has ever been entirely irresponsible. It is more satisfactory to so interpret his conduct. The frequency with which such explanations are offered, even where it is plainly a case of intentional fraud, makes most people rather skeptical about accepting any kind of an excuse whatever for such a course.

THE law in reference to contract labor being imported, though doubtless honestly intended, seems to be falling short of the purpose for which it was enacted. At least pauper labor keeps right on coming with apparently no diminution whatever, and much of it is no doubt a tadder contract before leaving Europe, while professional men and skilled workmen, a class of laborers desirable in every respect, are prevented from landing, if they happen to have accepted a position before starting for this country. A few amendments to this law would make its workings more satisfactory.

THE movement to secure a reduction in the price of commutation tickets on the Michigan Central railroad between here and Detroit is one to be commended. Once this is done, Ann Arbor will become a favorite suburban residence place for many of the wealthy families of our metropolis. No more beautiful city than Ann Arbor can be found in the state, while the educational advantages of our university town are, as a matter of course, superior to all others. A proper effort on the part of our Business Men's Association would, we believe, bring about a considerable reduction in the price of monthly tickets between here and Detroit, and result in a considerable and desirable addition to our population.

THE view of the Courier-Journal that the large trunk lines have offered Judge Cooley the place made vacant by Mr. Fink as a reward for his favoring them in the position he now holds is certainly a ridiculous one. Those who know the Judge personally will never for a moment believe any of his decisions have favored the railroads unless he was firmly convinced that the roads had the right on their side. If they believe he was favoring them in his present position, the roads would be glad to offer him a larger salary for the purpose of inducing him to give up his place on the commission. Rather would they desire to see him stay where he is. It is more reasonable to suppose that the railroad men, having become aware of the Judge's ability in the management of railroads, wish to avail themselves of his services, and are willing to pay what such services are worth.

COHMUKICATIONS.

Mr. Editor:
DEAR SIR:—With your permission I would like to say & word upon a subject about which you made mention a few weeks ago. Through the carelessness of pie while sprinkling the streets and lawns scarcely a day passes that some passer-by is not thoroughly drenched. There is no excuse for anything of the kind. If the people who are guilty of such a thing were not so blind and stupid, nothing of the kind would occur. A few complaints before the city authorities and a few arrests might be a good thing, and they will be made unless people are a little more judicious in the use of the hose.
Truly yours,
ONE WHO HAS BEEN SPRINKLED.

Editor of THE REGISTER:

SIR:—On some of the mail boxes about the city are printed the hours when mail will be collected from these particular boxes. Would it not be a good idea for the postmaster to have these announcements removed since the mail carriers, in many cases at least, do not pay any attention to them but collect the mail whenever it suits their convenience. Not a few times have I posted letters in a certain box and afterwards found that they had remained there 15 to 16 hours, greatly to the inconvenience and often to the considerable loss, both to myself and to my correspondent. Now that I know the cause of my letters being so often delayed I usually walk to the office, or, better still, to the train in order to mail any letters which I am anxious to have go forward at once. There are, doubtless, many who are not aware that they are being deceived by the announcements on these boxes and who will be glad to know that they cannot depend upon the mail being collected at any particular time.

Respectfully yours,
J. B.

Publisher of THE REGISTER:

MY DEAR SIR:—I liked what you said last week about sidewalks. There is one other thing to which the attention of our city fathers should be called. I refer to the trimming of our shade trees. It is all well enough to live in a forest, but let us have the under-brush cut out. As it is, there are many places where for whole blocks the electric lamps do not throw a particle of light upon the pavements, while on some streets one is obliged to be continually on the watch to keep his hat from being brushed off by the low limbs on the trees. A few dollars could be spent to good advantage in having these limbs removed from a large number of our shade trees. It would also be a good idea for our city council to order about half the awnings in the city raised six inches or more.
CITIZEN.

Mr. Editor:

DEAR SIR:—An item which appeared last week in one of our city papers in reference to fences seems to me to be rather one-sided. The statement is made that the general verdict is against fences being built about people's lawns. The number of fences still remaining in the city, and the new ones which are continually being built, contradicts such an idea. It is unreasonable to say that a neat iron fence detracts from the appearance of a lawn. In many cases it adds much to the beauty of the place, while it does away with what would otherwise be a necessity, (that is, a corner fence. Besides beautifying the place there are some practical advantages which make the yard fence desirable: It keeps children from getting out upon the streets and being run over by passing teams or trespassing upon other people's lawns and gardens; it keeps dogs and stray cattle and other animals, which are liable to be at liberty any time, from ruining a fine lawn or well kept flower garden; it keeps careless and ill bred people from making short cuts across beautiful lawns in order to save a few steps, while at the same time it adds to the exclusiveness which should be found about every home. Of course many of the old picket and board fences about the city are extremely disagreeable to the eye, but this does not prove that all fences are not ornamental. Many in our city are certainly very attractive. I, for one, say, let us have fences around our lawns but let them be properly taken care of.
Your obedient servant, L. M.

Appointments by the Regents.

The executive committee of the board of regents held a meeting on Tuesday evening to finish up the work which was not completed by the board.

At the last meeting, the chair of histology was given to Prof. Gibbs, in connection with the chair of pathology. As satisfactory laboratories could not be provided, histology was added to the work of Prof. W. W. Howell, recently appointed professor of physiology.

Louis P. Hall was appointed assistant to the professor of clinical and mechanical dentistry.

The following appointments were made on the hospital staff of the medical department: Joseph Clark, steward of both hospitals; P. B. Rowe, resident physician; T. G. Saeider, ward-master; Miss E. G. Willoughby, ward-mistress; Patrick Sully and Mary A. Kimball, nurses.

William A. Campbell, M. D., was appointed instructor in anatomy, in connection with his other work, and his salary raised to $1,200.

Association Tent at the Encampment.

The State Executive Committee of Michigan Young Men's Christian Associations will provide a pleasant rendezvous for the members of the Military Organizations, in camp at Lake Gougac, August 8-15.

A large tent containing correspondence tables with writing materials; good reading matter, including the leading dailies and weeklies of the State; illustrated papers, magazines and books; besides checkers and other games will be at the disposal of the "boys."

Various means of outdoor recreation, including tennis, quoits and base ball, will be provided.

Religious services will be held from time to time, as opportunity may occur, to which everyone will be welcome.

It is hoped by these means to make the Association Tent a popular place of resort, and thus help to counteract the tendencies of camp life.

Prices and Quality!

Competition in trade forces prices to correspond with quality.

No man can manufacture for one dollar what another and older manufacturer cannot produce for twice that amount. There are prices and prices, and qualities and qualities, and in every case they correspond.

If you are about to buy an article, no matter whether it be a wash-tub or threshing machine, buy the best. Purchase an article made by a long established house with a known and pronounced reputation.

The manufacturer who makes an article, asks what it is worth and maintains his price and constantly increases his sales, gives positive evidence of the standard quality of his Goods, and in these days of cheap (?) Goods and all kinds of prices. It is worth considerable to know what you are going to get before you spend your dollars.

'MESSRS. HAINES BROS.' PIANO MANUFACTURERS, (Established 1851) manage somehow to sell all the pianos they can make in two large factories (The second completed Jan. 1st, 1889) and get a reasonable price for them, while hundreds of other manufacturers and agents are trying to "give away" their Goods and claiming they are "just as good."

It seems strange HAINES BROS.' continue to keep going, but they have just completed their 33,000th piano and manage to make and sell about 75 per week.

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MOBTON, Ph. D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. 8. DAJJA HATES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair-minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

SCENE II.

I got my way, always a pleasant thing to do. But I think in this case the pleasantness inseparable from making one's will override the wills of other people was reduced as low as it could be. I was setting off on a raw winter afternoon, with a rising wind, falling barometer and thickening snow, upon a twelve mile drive along a rutty road, to visit a woman whom—despite the stoutness of my assertions to the contrary to my children—I scarcely knew; against whose husband mine had a rooted prejudice and for bringing her into more intimate relations with whom I was well aware that he would be less than moderately grateful to me. Why, then, was I doing it? This is the question I am about to answer, and when it is answered you will probably think me an even greater fool than I did my girls, who were ignorant that I had any reasons beyond native pig headedness.

It would be putting the amount of thought that I was apt to devote to Mrs. Smith far too high to say that I thought of her once a year. She had certainly never crossed my mind on the previous day. Why, then, was it that no sooner was I asleep last night than I was with her? It would have seemed natural that I, who during all my waking hours had been occupied with my husband, his plans, his departure, his absence, his return, should, if I dreamed at all, have dreamed of him. He never once crossed my brain. I had other absorbing subjects of interest, an attachment of Sue's that I disapproved of and over which I worried head and heart through many an anxious hour; a budding taste for play in my eldest boy; debts of his to be hidden from his father; a wearing fear lest my excellent younger son should break down under the strain of his examination for the Indian civil service.

Yes, I had a choice of nightmares in my stable, a row of skeletons in my closet, any one of which would, one might think, have furnished the stuff for my sleeping thoughts as they did unceasingly for my waking ones. Not at all! I passed them all by, to dream wholly, connectedly, and with an astonishing vividness of Mrs. Smith.

I was with her in a room—a room I had never, to my knowledge, been in before; presumably at Longmains, whose doors I had never entered. It was a room simply. No feature of it impressed itself with any distinctness on my memory, as I have heard has often been the case in other vivid dreams. On reflection, I was not sure that I should know it again. Of one only fact in connection with it was I quite certain, and that was, that as we sat together at the fire, the door, the only door the room possessed, was on our left hand.

We were sitting, as I say, together by the fire. There was a clock on the mantel piece; what kind of clock it was was dim to me; but there was a clock, for I remembered hearing it tick. Mrs. Smith was sitting opposite to me; her back toward the door, facing which I was. I could see her features as plainly as I had done Sue's, when she knelt beside me at luncheon, asking why I was so mysterious. I could not have believed that I knew Mrs. Smith's face so well; her unimportant nose, her slightly indicated eyes, lusterless air, and characterless figure. But out of some lumber room of memory they must have started, conjured up by the strong spell of sleep. It was a perfectly connected, rational dream. It was I, and she was Mrs. Smith. She was not half Mrs. Smith and half somebody else. She did not suddenly, and without exciting any surprise in my mind—so eccentric are the laws of dreaming—become metamorphosed into another person. She was, and continued to be, Mrs. Smith, of Longmains.

The one thing that clashed with probability was the fact of my being sitting tete-a-tete with Mrs. Smith in any room late at night, for somehow I knew that it was late at night. I do not remember looking at the clock, but I was by some means aware that such was the case. We were both working, and one of us had said something about its being 12 o'clock. This was followed by Mrs. Smith making an observation which I had forgotten. I was sure that I had heard it perfectly at the time, for immediately on waking I had recalled it, but afterward it had escaped me, and, make what efforts I might, I was unable to recapture it. After all, it was of no great consequence whether I remembered it or not.

What I did remember, with a startling distinctness, was that no sooner had she ceased speaking than there came a knock at the door. I remembered thinking that it was an odd time of night for any one to knock at the door, but Mrs. Smith showed no surprise. She said phlegmatically, "Come in;" and the door opened at once and in walked the butler. For some strange dream reason I could not see his face. It was all mist and blur to me. On waking I felt sure that I should not be able to recognize him again. I was only conscious that he was a young man. He had a coal box in his hand, and the next thing of which I was aware about him was that he was kneeling at the hearth, making up the fire. Again it struck me that it was a* odd time to choose to make up the fire. I had, as I tell you, for some reasonless reason, not seen his face, though it must have been turned toward me as he entered the room; but as he knelt at the fire I saw his back—saw it so clearly that I felt that, stooping in the same attitude over the flame, I should recognize it among ten thousand. I saw it far more distinctly than as I drove along I saw the frozen pastures and the shivering sheep.

Mrs. Smith had risen from her chair and walked to the other side of the room, when she stood doing something—I did not know what—at a piece of furniture with drawers in it. I was not looking at her, but at the man, and suddenly I found myself wondering what that was that I saw sticking up dimly visible out of his coat tail pocket. As I wondered, I became aware that he was stealthily rising to his feet, and that his hand was cautiously traveling to his pocket in search of that very object which had arrested my attention. In another second he had drawn it out—it was a revolver—had cocked it, aimed it at his mistress' head and fired!

There was a thud, a horrible thud, that I heard plainly even now as I drove along in my safe brougham, and I woke screaming—screaming so loudly that if any one had been occupying a room near mine they must have been awake by the sound; but, as it happened, nobody was. The girls were separated from me by a long passage, and the servants were in an entirely different region.

The dream had been so much more real than reality that it must have been some minutes—it seemed to me hours—before my reason could assert itself enough to tell me which was which. I do not know how long it was before I at length summoned up resolution to strike a light, and shaking with terror so that I could hardly hold the candle to get out of bed and examine the room for some indication of what could have been the cause of that dread, dull noise, which I could by no possibility believe to have existed only in my imagination. I searched in vain. The windows were all securely fastened; the door bolted, as I had left it over night. The pictures hung on the walls; there was no brick fallen from the chimney on the hearth; not even a handful of soot or a starling's nest. Nothing, nothing anywhere.

I crept back to bed, still quivering in every nerve. I must make up my mind that the whole thing had been the work of my own fancy, preternaturally alive in sleep. Good heavens! Could the power of any imagination be adequate to presenting to me with the astounding vividness mine had done the figure of that man, kneeling with his back to me by the fire and stealing a covert hand to that coat pocket. I shut my eyes. Still I saw him, and with such distinctness I felt that if I put out my hand I must touch him. I lit another candle. The more light the better; still, I saw him. I hid my head under the clothes; still I saw him. The cold sweat stood on my forehead. I lay in an agony till day-break; and when the reassuring light began to creep in, I became a little more able to summon to my aid such reason as I was master of, to correct the hitherto overwhelming influence of that ghastly vision.

Several circumstances of improbability in the dream presented themselves with some reassurance to my mind. The murderer, as seen by me, had been a young man. Now, I happened accidentally to have learned only lately that the Smiths possessed as butler an old family servant, who had lived with them over thirty years, and whom they were most unlikely to have parted with. Also, throughout the dream, I was conscious that but for servants, Mrs. Smith and I were alone in the house. Now, only yesterday one of the girls had casually mentioned meeting Mr. Smith in Leighton. As the light broadened I dwelt with more and more confidence on these discrepancies, and was able to go down to breakfast presenting such a distant resemblance to my usual self as I have described.

But when left to myself after breakfast, with nothing to distract my thoughts and no appearances of equanimity to keep up, the vision returned upon me with almost its first force.

Again I saw that kneeling figure, that stealthy rising, that traveling of the hand to the coat pocket. I heard the click of that cocked revolver! I could not bear it. It must mean something! I must go to her. Must warn her. As you know, I rang the bell to order the carriage. But in the interval, before it was answered, the vision passed; reason, or what I supposed to be reason, reasserted its sway, telling me how shadowy was the pretext upon which I was going to intrude upon this stranger; how little my husband would thank me, etc.

This same thing was repeated more than once; it was only Alice's triumphant "That settles it!" which gave me the final impetus that enabled me to decide which of the two courses to adopt, though, indeed, I thought I must have gone in any case. I could not get that man's kneeling back from before my eyes. I could not have faced another night alone in the dark with it.

So now, reader, you know my reason for setting off at past 3 o'clock on a January afternoon upon a twelve mile drive along a rutty road with rising wind and thickening snow, to visit an almost entire stranger, whom my husband did not wish me to hold any communication with. Probably you think me as great a fool as the girls would have done. I was too much occupied with my own thoughts to notice the weather or the landscape much. I was worried with the stupid effort (which yet I could not help making) to recall that remark of Mrs. Smith's, which had immediately preceded the knock at the door in my dream. In vain, no glimmering of it would recur to me. I was still cudgeling on my restive memory for it when my attention was awakened by the carriage stopping and the footman appearing at the window.

"If you please, the coachman is afraid he is not sure which of these roads he ought to take."

I put my head out. We were at three cross roads.

"Why, there is a sign post!" said I, tartly. "Why do you not look at it?"

"If you please, the names are all rubbed out."

Here the coachman leaned from his box to join in the conversation.

"The snow is coming on very thick, ma'am; I doubt our getting to Longmains to-night."

"At all events we will try," replied I with decision. "Go slowly along which ever road you think looks most likely until you pass a cottage or some inn at which you can ask."

I was obeyed. We moved slowly in a dismal uncertainty for some way; in the waning light the figures of the two men, with their whitened hats and great coats, grew indistinct. Then we stopped again. Praise heaven, we had met some one! I let down the glass to look and listen; yes, there was a whitened countryman standing in the snow, being questioned. He was deaf apparently; and it was some time before he could be got to understand the drift of the interrogatory addressed to him.

When at length he did I gathered from his words and gestures, as well as the wind would let me, the reassuring information that we had come wrong. And, as ill luck would have it, the road had narrowed so much that we had to go on for some distance before finding a place wide enough to enable us to turn. So that it must have been fully half an hour from the time of our first passing it before we found ourselves once again at tile finger post; that blind leader of the blind. The dark had fully fallen before we found ourselves rolling noiselessly as snow could make us over the cobblestoned streets of a little country town.

"This must be Salcote," said I to myself; "I know that Salcote is their town. Courage! We can't be very far off now."

"Let no one holla before they are out of the wood!"

This thought had scarcely passed through my mind before I was conscious of a jolt, severer than any that the snow wrapped pavement of Salcote could inflict; the carriage gave a sort of dip on one side; in an instant the horses were pulled up on their haunches, the footman off the box and holding the carriage door open.

"If you please, m'm, you will have to get out; one of the wheels has come off."

I did not need a second bidding. In an instant I was out standing in the snow, and peering with the help of Salcote's dim street gas at one of the hind wheels in order to verify my servant's words. They were but too true. It had come off. Fortunately in so doing it had fallen inward instead of outward, in which latter case the carriage must, of course, have been overturned. I stared stupidly at it. "Was this a judgment on me for my pig headedness? What was to be done?"

"Which is the best inn in town?" asked I, addressing generally a group of gapers which, snowball like, had gathered round me and my broken wheel. Half a dozen voices instantly cried "White Hart;" as many dirty fingers pointed up the street to where, about a hundred yards off, I could faintly see an old fashioned sign hanging out.

"I suppose," said I disconsolately to the coachman, who was already beginning to unfasten the traces, "that you will have to stay here the night; I must go home in a fly."

As I spoke I bet off to walk to the White Hart, which I reached in about two minutes.

"My carriage has broken down," said I as I entered, addressing the civil woman—landlady, I suppose—who came to me. "I want a fly at once, please, as soon as it can be got ready. Have you one in—a good fly? I want a good fly at once, please," repeating the words with an emphasis which I thought must impress them upon my hearer. She assured me that she had, though from the length of time that elapsed before it appeared I since have felt certain that she had not spoken the truth, but had to wait in hope of the return of some vehicle now conveying another fare and of some poor, tired horse, destined through me to be barked of his hard earned feed.

Am I sat waiting in the little inn parlor my thoughts were not of the most complacent. Perhaps I had had enough of having my own will now. After all, I had better henceforth submit tamely to Alice's rule. I was clearly not fit to rule myself. Into what a stupid quandary had I brought myself, guided only by the will-o'-the-wisp of a senseless dream? Well, the only rational course now left me to adopt was to return home as quickly as possible, acknowledge my folly, submit with what good humor I could muster to the just laughter that folly would provoke, and resolve never to make such a fool of myself again. As I so resolved a girl entered to poke the fire and ask if I would like to take anything. I refused and inquired how far they called it to Longmains.

"To Longmains, m'm? About three miles, m'm; not quite three miles, but it is not a good road."

She left the room again. Only three miles! To have come so near and then turn back? Should I not turn back? Should I go on? As I hesitated again I saw that kneeling figure stealthily rising, with its backward traveling hand. I looked round with a shiver. I wished the girl would come in again; I wished that I was not alone in the room. I shut my eyes, and still before them was that kneeling figure.

I must go on! I would go on! At the same moment the landlady entered to tell me that a fly was at the door, and I followed her out. There it stood, with the horse's head—it was a spirited, disappointed head, poor beast—turned toward my own home and the footman holding the door open. I got in.

"Home, m'm?" asked he, touching his hat, and evidently in no doubt as to the answer.

"No," said I desperately; "to Longmains."

For an instant he looked staggered, as if doubting his own ears; then prepared to get on to the box.

"Stay," said I; "you must not come with me. You must find your own way home, and tell the young ladies not to be alarmed, however late it may be before I return, and tell him to go on and drive as quick as he can."

I was off; we clattered with a spurious briskness until we had left behind us the streets of the little town. Then we dropped into a tired crawl, in which we continued. The horse was evidently all but done. Ah! but for me, he might have had his poor nose in his manger! They certainly had not erred on the Bide of exaggeration who had told me that the road was not a good one. It was abominable. I was tossed up in the air and caught again a hundred times like a cup and ball, by the monstrous ruts; the fly smelled rampantly of straw and dust and worn eaten cloth; the piercing winds blew through it. If any one in after time ever asked me what was the distance between Salcote and Longmains, I always answered thirty miles. And I really believed it.

At last, however, we stopped at a gate, the driver got down; there was no lodge; and after interminable fumbling he opened it, and we passed through. There were three more gates, at all of which he fumbled, so that when at last we drew up at a hall door I had the pleasure of hearing the Hour of 6 tolled distinctly by several clocks within and without the house.

"My carriage has broken down." What an hour to which to call, with a twelve mile drive home afterward! If a white headed seneschal—obviously the confidential family servant of whom I had heard—appeared in answer to my ring, I would thrust in my card, and return whence I came, without asking to be admitted. I waited breathlessly. It was some time before any one appeared. Who, indeed, would be expected to arrive at such an hour? At length there was a sound of steps, and of a turning handle. The door opened, and in the aperture appeared a man. Was he an old or young one? I craned my head out feverishly to ascertain. Young, obviously young. But perhaps he was a footman. Again I stared feverishly out. No, he was not in livery. He was a butler, and he was a young man.

So are the American Combination Gingham at 15c. The honor roll of dress goods bargains would be lacking without the Alabama Wool Challis at 5 cents.

Coats Spool Cotton was now sold for 4 cents per spool or 47 cents per dozen less a discount of 6 per cent in quantities of one dozen or more? You can buy it here at the above prices and when you come for it you will find White Cotton from No. 8 to 140, Black Cotton from No. 8 to 130, Colored Cotton in all of the desirable colors made from No. 40 to 60.

Morris Lantz and Theodore Wetzel started for Whitmore Lake during the severe storm Saturday night, and long before they arrived there they were sorry that they had not waited until daylight. Hill bid in two places, the elegant new house on the corner of Fourth and Liberty-6ts, for $3,000, and the brick house on the corner of East University and South University-avep, for $3,000.

There is some talk of changing the dates of holding the Washtenaw county fair. Notwithstanding the great pains taken by our managers to ascertain on what dates the fairs in surrounding towns would be held, a clashing of dates of the fairs in this city, Ypsilanti and Plymouth has arisen, all of them being set for opening on Sept. 24. The managers of the Washtenaw county fair wish to make it a fair for the entire county and it is quite likely that the dates will be changed, either a week earlier or a week later, to avoid interfering with the other fairs.

The Chicago & Grand Trunk Railroad Company have decided to put in a mile of side track on the south side of the State Fair Ground?, at Lansing, enabling exhibitors to reach the grounds direct with stock and machinery. This outlay of several thousand dollars will do much to make the coming Fair a success. It shows a spirit of enterprise and accommodation that will be fully appreciated.

The Technic, the annual publication of the Engineering Society of the University, was issued from this office last week. It is a model publication, filled with fine cuts and interesting matter. The special features are the biographical sketch of that popular teacher, Prof. M. E. Cooley, with a fine photo-engraving, and a photo-engraving showing the different University buildings and the campus.

The bicyclists of this city have a hard life of it. Crowded off of the sidewalks by law, they cannot get their rights with other vehicles on the roads. On Monday, Dr. G. C. Huber took a severe "header" by being forced into the ditch by a carriage driven by one of the University professors, who knowingly drove so that Huber would be compelled to go into the ditch. Even when the Prof. saw him fall, he did not stop to see whether Huber had broke his neck or not. As both Huber and his bicycle were recently injured by being run into by a wagon, he feels as though the driver must have a special spite against the bicyclist.

The officers have been on the look-out for the past ten days for Otto Von Tessmer, who has been employed as taxidermist at the University for some time past. The charge against him is a very serious one, getting two little girls, eight or ten years old, drunk. Should he be found, a warrant will be issued for his arrest for one of the most serious offenses known to the law. It is charged that for several months past he has been in the habit of enticing little girls into out-of-the-way places and making indecent exposure of his person to them. The complaints of this have been numerous and should he be caught, it is likely that he will serve a long term in prison.

The Storm on Tuesday.

The thunder-storm on Tuesday afternoon was one of the most severe that ever visited Ann Arbor, the rain and hail falling in torrents, the rainfall being one and one fifth inches in less than an hour. The house of James Cook, on E. University-ave, was struck by lightning, a part of the chimney being torn down and several rafters splintered. Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Dr. Darling, with their children, were in the house and felt the shock but were not injured. The storm was the most severe in the northern part of the city, along the banks of the river.

At the Michigan Central depot the water was a foot deep on the south side and covered the tracks on the north side, and about two feet of muddy water covered the cellar bottom. The basement of Ferguson's cart factory was covered with about six inches of mud and water, the course of water down Detroit and Division-sts being changed by the closing of the sewers, and pouring the flood down between the drive-way and into the basement of the shops.

The hail appeared to be confined mostly to the northern part of the city also, and fortunately did not reach the fruit orchards on the high ground. A number of gardens were damaged badly by the pelting hail and if it had reached the peach trees, the damage would have been great.

The lightning made matters interesting around the telephone, telegraph and electric light stations but did not do any damage. The horses that were tied out in the rain did not take kindly to it and several of them broke away and ran through the streets.

Skillful Treatment.

Osvozzo Times.—Dr. Fruth, of New York, Physician and Surgeon, late Surgeon in the Providence Dispensary of New York City, by request of his many friends and patients will make a return visit to Ann Arbor, Tuesday, August 6th, 1889. The doctor is meeting with gratifying success, and we advise the afflicted to consult him on the above date. His speciality is chronic diseases and diseases of the eye and ear, and he gives his entire attention to the successful treatment of these complaints. His success is due to a thorough knowledge of the human system, gained by an extensive hospital experience and careful study. He does not profess to perform miracles nor to work by magic, but extensive experience in the hospitals of New York City, office association with eminent specialists there and years of study with the best authorities, make his treatment in certain lines of practice worthy of consideration. That it is skillful, that it is not experimental, that it represents the best improvements and developments of modern discovery, is all that is claimed for it. Health is as important as life, and no invalid who values health can afford to lose this opportunity of obtaining his skillful treatment. Consultations free at the Arlington House on the above date.
