ELECTRIC BOLTS.

They Cause Loss of Life in Several Localities.

A Residence Blown Down and a Boy Killed—Other Persons Lose Their Lives by Lightning—Antics of the Wind.

DEVASTATION IN INDIANA.

COLUMBUS, Ind., Aug. 17.—A terrible wind and electrical storm swept over this county about 3 o'clock Saturday morning. There was one continued flash of lightning. At Elizabethtown, this county, the elements assumed the shape of a cyclone, and the black clouds hung apparently near the ground, and whirled and twisted in a fearful manner. There were dazzling flashes of lightning and loud and instant reports from the electrical bolts, two of which struck the frame residence of Horace Trent and burned it to the ground. The entire upper story of the fine brick schoolhouse was torn away and the building rendered of little value. The brick residence of Charles Sisco had one end and one side blown into the street. His wife, hearing the storm, had just stepped into a frame addition when the crash came, and escaped uninjured. The 16-year-old son, Ezra, was asleep in a bed near the wall that gave way, and was buried some 3 feet in the debris and was fatally hurt about the head and breast. The father was also hurt, but not fatally. From the Sisco dwelling a good-sized mirror was carried some distance, and when found was not damaged. The stables of Mrs. Carter and James Burns were blown down and two horses in the former's barn were killed. The large grain elevator belonging to Ed Springer, the barn of Daniel Burns, R. C. Newsum's flouring-mill and the Christian church building were badly damaged, and a large number of fruit and forest trees were completely torn to pieces. A horse belonging to Ed Springer and a mule owned by Daniel Burns were killed by lightning. The damage done by the cyclone in the town cannot be estimated. Some three hours later a very angry cloud appeared in the southwest and moved east very rapidly, with continual flashes of lightning and a continued roar of thunder. When first seen by parties in this city it was very low and rolling eastward, but gradually rose before reaching here. In the center of this city there wasn't enough wind to lift one's hat off, while some shade and fruit trees were badly damaged in both the extreme northern and southern parts of the city. In East Columbus the house of Charles McCalla was struck by lightning and Mr. McCalla was so badly shocked as to paralyze his left side. About 300 yards north of the McCalla residence a cow belonging to George Monroe was struck by an electric bolt and instantly killed. A young man by the name of Carson, who was sitting in a chair in the door of his father's residence, was so badly shocked that he became insensible, and his physician thinks his nervous system has been shattered and his mind injured.

CONFESSES TO BIG ROBBERIES.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 17.—John A. Valentine, who is serving a term in the penitentiary for burglary, says that in 1886, assisted by Ned Lyons, who has just been released from the prison, and George Miles and Pete Curley, he robbed the Ocean bank of New York of about $500,000 in cash and $100,000 in bonds. He says he then went to Maryland, where he received $800,000 through another robbery.

Three Persons Drowned.

GRAND FALLS, S. D., Aug. 18.—Rev. William T. Currie, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church; Ruth Currie, his daughter, 13 years old, and Dora Van Kirk, 14 years old, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Van Kirk, were drowned in the Red river Monday evening while bathing.

DEATH OF MRS. POLK.

The Widow of the Eleventh President of the United States Passes Away.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 15.—Surrounded by a few loving friends and relatives Mrs. James D. Polk, relict of the eleventh president of the United States, departed this life at 7:30 a. m. yesterday, peacefully and quietly, in the full possession of her mental faculties. Mrs. Polk had been in perfect health until last Wednesday evening, when on returning from a short drive she was taken suddenly ill, from which she never rallied. The bells throughout the city were mournfully tolled and sympathy and regret were heard from the masses of people as they gazed upon the bulletin announcing the demise of this honored and beloved lady, who spent her years among the people she loved so well and who respected her as one of the noblest of her sex.

HER LIFE CRUSHED OUT.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 17.—Miss Anna Haukes, of Terre Haute, whose professional name is Leroy, made a balloon ascension Saturday afternoon at Coney Island, a resort 10 miles up the river. The balloon sailed about a mile westward, and when 500 feet high she cut loose with the parachute. The rope of the trapeze immediately broke. The woman descended like an arrow, striking the ground on her feet and was driven into the earth above her knees. When reached her lifeless body was found mashed almost out of shape.

FRIGHTFUL FALLS.

A Series of Serious Mishaps to Several Balloonists.

TACOMA, Wash., Aug. 17.—Aeronauts Woodhall and Parker have been giving exhibitions here. Saturday afternoon Woodhall was ill and Parker made an ascent. He braced up before hand on whisky, and when several hundred feet up he began to do trapeze acts, when the balloon became unsteady, he should have remained quiet. Suddenly he lost his hold and fell like a shot to the earth. Parker cannot recover. He is imbedded in plaster casts at the hospital and is barely alive. Both legs have been amputated. His partner, Woodhall, made another ascension Sunday afternoon.

Capt. Pratt died last Thursday at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. L. J. Stiles. Appropriate services were held at the house on Sunday. The remains were taken to Brighton and placed beside his wife, who died a few years ago. He was in the late war, but never joined the G. A. R. or received any pension.
The concert by the business men's quartette, assisted by Miss Hattie Long and brother, all of Ann Arbor, at the Methodist church, Tuesday evening last week, was a decided success, musically, financially and otherwise. The instrumental portion was very fine, and Miss Long's rendition of "Old Joe" was heartily enjoyed.

Bridgewater.

James M. Kress died very suddenly of apoplexy, Wednesday, Aug. 13, 1891. He was born in New York, Dec. 25, 1827 and was therefore in his sixty-fourth year. He came to Michigan in 1836. He was for many years supervisor of Bridgewater and has held several other offices of trust and responsibility. He owned a fine farm in excellent condition. He leaves a wife and daughter and many friends. He was buried Friday with Masonic rites.

OUR YPSILANTI RAMBLER.
Tells What He Has Seen and Heard in that Burg During the Past Seven Days and Nights.
Friends of Miss Fannie Kief will be pleased to learn that she has received and accepted a $500 position in the public schools at Grand Rapids. Arthur Smith is now one of the traveling salesmen for the Scharf Tag, Label and Box Company, of this city. The Evansville pump factory will locate here and use the Gilbert building, near the Michigan Central depot, unless some calamity happens to prevent. The Ypsi pickle factory is getting down to real business; in fact, they are in a regular pickle, all the time; going to make jams and jellies, too, after they get a little used to the business. A stranger here would think our Methodist meeting house had been transported hither from the wilds of northern Michigan. It's an odd, old fashioned, back-woods looking building, but Mr. Venning preaches just as popular sermons as ever, and he knows there is a good time and a new church coming soon. Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Elder are back from Europe and spending a few weeks with F. P. Bogardus and family. It's too hot to dig diligently for news unless one is very ambitious and clever, so I can justly say I don't know anything about any body, even if I am a RAMBLER.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the action, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, Sick Headache and refreshes the mind.
"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat I had to digest with great difficulty. I was distressed, or, as I would say, I was in a little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced."

LITERARY NOTES.

Mr. William Henry Smith, the manager of the Associated Press, has written an article for the forthcoming August Century on "The Press as a News Gatherer," in which he describes the origin and growth of that famous organization, the Associated Press. The entire world is covered in its wonderful system.—The Century Co., New York, N. Y.

The Overland Monthly for August presents, in its series of industrial articles, a paper by Charles G. Yale on "Gold Mining of Today." It is a valuable statement of the present conditions of this the oldest of Californian industries, and is abundantly illustrated by pictures that show the processes and peculiarities of the work.—Overland Pub. Co., San Francisco, Cal.

Scribner's Magazine for August is a "Fiction Number," and contains five complete short stories by Thomas Nelson Page, T. R. Sullivan, A. A. Hayes, Annie Eliot, and John J. Beckel. Four of the stories are illustrated, each by an artist chosen for his skill in delineating the special characters and incidents which are the features of the tale.—Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

The Atlantic Monthly for August has two notable features besides the serial stories by Mrs. Catherwood and Mr. Stockton. Henry James contributes an admirable short story entitled "The Marriage," which will delight his army of admirers; and Mr. John C. Ropes, who is peculiarly strong in writing on military subjects, has an excellent paper on General Sherman, awarding him great but not indiscriminating praise.—Houghton Mifflin & Co., Boston, Mass.

The current number of Harper's Weekly includes among its many attractive features a series of illustrations from instantaneous photographs of the recent Naval Review of Boston.

Harper's Bazar for this week presents, as usual, a rich variety of articles pertaining to the fashions, domestic economy, household management, etc., including a Pattern sheet Supplement. Interesting articles are contributed by Colonel T. W. Higginson, C. DeHurst, Mrs. Agnes B. Ormsbee, and others.—Harper and Brothers, New York, N. Y.

The Magazine of Art for August is an unusually good number. It has a strong literary interest too, for the opening article is devoted to "The Portraits of Thackeray," and is by F. G. Kitton, who is an expert in the discovering of literary portraits. The other portraits are more familiar, but none the less interesting. "Concerning Some Punch Artists" comes not inappropriately after the Thackeray paper, and is particularly timely, as on the 17th of this month Punch will celebrate its semi-centennial.—Cassell Publishing Company, 35 cents a number, $3.50 a year.

The August Popular Science Monthly deserves special notice. It opens with one of Dr. Andrew D. White's able Chapters in the Warfare of Science, entitled From Fetich to Hygiene, which gives a terrible picture of the ravages of epidemics when prayers and saintly relics were relied upon to check them. The Value of Statistics is discussed by Hon. Carroll D. Wright, who tells how census returns should be used, and shows how they are sometimes made to give false evidence. Mr. S. N. Dexter North closes his interesting account of The Evolution of the Woolen Industry in the illustrated series on American Industries.—D. Appleton & Co., New York, N. Y.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Mark Twain is at Aix nursing a sprained wrist, bathing to recover his health, and generally finding life around the rouge et noir tables as dull as a criticism upon his own works.

The peculiar enervating effect of summer weather is driven off by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which "makes the weak strong."

Barbara Fritchie's grave, in the German Reformed church near Frederick, Md., is covered with briars and creeping plants, and marked by a headstone on which are inscribed her name and age, and the suggestive date, "1862."

Job, the patient man must feel badly when he is told how boils are cured now by the use of Hubbard's Herb Extract. It is a powerful vegetable remedy. It cures scrofula, cancer, salt rheum, boils and ulcers and all manner of blood and skin diseases, try it.

I have been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years; I have lost sense of smell entirely, and I had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were getting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as fine a needle as ever I did, my sense of smell is partly restored, and it seems to be improving all the time.

Poor Mr. Cleveland.

Just now there is going the rounds a manifesto, said to issue from Buffalo, against the re-nomination of Mr. Cleveland. It matters little whether this manifesto is the genuine expression of Democrats, or an invention of the enemy, Mr. Cleveland's danger arises not so much from enemies who resort to such publications, as from Democrats who think more than they talk, and give their vote where their convictions go—or withhold them. It is the stand of thousands of these, the lack of whose votes will prevent Mr. Cleveland from re-ascending the White House steps should he be re-nominated. They voted for Mr. Cleveland, after advocating his re-nomination, with a generous trust that found no response after his election. He neither sought or cared for a warm place in the democratic heart, and the heart will leave him in his solitary grandeur. Mr. Cleveland may be re-nominated. That manifesto is hardly worth regarding. But he will not be re-elected—not because of that, but in spite of it. If he loved democracy, and therefore Democrats loved him, as the true democracy loved Jackson and Jefferson, the manifesto would be a stepping stone to success.—Ypsilanti Sentinel.

Deer Park and Oakland.

To those contemplating a trip to the mountains in search of health or pleasure, Deer Park, on the dome of the Alleghany Mountains, 3,000 feet above the sea level, offers such varied attractions as a delightful atmosphere during both day and night, pure water, smooth, winding roads through the mountains and valleys, and the most picturesque scenery in the Alleghany range. The hotel is equipped with such adjuncts conducive to the enjoyment, pleasure and comfort of its guests as Turkish and Russian baths, swimming pools for both ladies and gentlemen, billiard rooms, superbly furnished parlors, and rooms single or in suite, all facilities for dancing, an unexcelled cuisine and a superior service.

The surrounding grounds as well as the hotel are lighted with electricity, have croquet and shady nooks, meandering walks, lawn tennis courts and grassy play grounds for children within full view of the inviting verandas. Six miles distant on the same mountain summit is Oakland, the twin resort of Deer Park, and equally as well equipped for the entertainment and accommodations of its guests. Both hotels are upon the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, have the advantage of its splendid Vestibuled Limited Express trains between the East and West, and are, therefore, readily accessible from all parts of the country. Tickets good for return passage until October 31st, are on sale at greatly reduced rates at all principal ticket offices throughout the country. Tickets reading from St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Columbus, Chicago and any point on B. & O. system are good to stop off at either Deer Park or Oakland, and can be extended by agent at either resort if requested by him for safe keeping.

For full information as to rates, rooms etc., address George D. DeShields, Manager, Deer Park or Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland.

Some of the Gold That Went Abroad. Our merchandise exports for the year ending June 30 1891, were $884,425,405, and our imports were $54,905,491, a total of $933,330,896. Of this large amount foreign vessels freighted about $1,000,000,000, and earned probably $100,000,000 of American gold to sail away in foreign countries.

Eyes and Ears.

Have we that we may see and hear; brains that we may reason and understand; so there's little excuse for much of the suffering that is tolerated. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is fast becoming the one recognized remedy for all diseases resulting from thin, impure and impoverished blood. Indigestion and dyspepsia, scrofulous affections, liver and kidney diseases, sores and swellings, catarrh and consumption, are blood affections. With purified, rich and vitalized blood, they flee like darkness before the light! Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the only guaranteed blood-purifier and liver invigorator. Sold on trial! Money promptly returned, if it doesn't benefit or cure.

He is a Benedict Now.

She—I suppose now that you have graduated you are an "A. B.," aren't you, Mr. Crimmon? He—Well, to tell you the truth, Miss Annex, I—um—would prefer leaving off the "B," and I thought—ahem—you, perhaps, could help me get rid of it?

New Equipment on the Wabash.

The Wabash Railroad has just placed on its day trains between Chicago and St. Louis a line of elegant new Wagner buffet parlor cars. These cars make direct connection at St. Louis with through sleepers for Hot Springs and the South-west. The night train on the Wabash running between Chicago and St. Louis have long had the distinction of being the finest in the West, their compartment sleepers being especially popular. This new departure brings their day trains up to the same standard. 517

His Inference.

"I tell you frankly," said the young lady to the young journalist, "that your company is agreeable to me, but I am sure my papa will not permit me to receive any attentions from you, for he is awfully down on the newspapers." "He is down on the newspapers," is he?" said the young journalist, smiling. "What scrape has he been in?"

AMONG THE BEES.

Practical Suggestions and Directions About Hiving Swarms.

When swarming time is at hand it is important to have everything ready. Many swarms are lost every year, and in most cases on account of carelessness on the part of the beekeeper. To be successful, bees must not be caught "napping," but "be up and dressed," and when a swarm issues be prepared to have it immediately. Hives and frames should be in readiness, and at least one fixed on the stand where you want the new swarm placed, and carry the hive.

A HOMEMADE SWARMING APPARATUS.

Many times bees light high, or on fruit or ornamental trees, and do not wish to injure by cutting the limb off. In such a case some kind of a swarming apparatus is very convenient. The one here reproduced from Ohio Farmer is made from a long forked stick. Bend the forks together in the shape of a hoop, and just large enough to go in a large coffee sack (or other open material that will not smother the bees), then fasten it in the month of the sack. Bend the stick near the fork. For convenience cut the stick in two near the fork, and fasten the two parts together again, so they can be easily taken apart. This makes a very good swarming arrangement. It is very cheap, light and convenient, says the authority quoted.

Shake the bees from the limb into the sack, turn it over, and no bees can escape; carry them to the hive; take the cover off and gently lay the sack on top of the frames, so the bees can crawl out of the sack down into the hive. Sometimes a swarm will leave their new home. To make a sure thing of their staying, give them a comb containing brood and honey from the parent hive. I have never had a swarm to leave when thus treated.

In hiving a swarm on empty frames we do not mean that they are strictly empty, but frames that have a "starter" in them, which is a narrow strip of foundation about an inch wide, fastened in the center of the underside of the top bar, and on the same principle that foundation is fastened in section boxes. This serves as a comb guide, and we get the combs built just where we want them.

The Losses in Corn Fodder.

From experiments made at the Wisconsin station to ascertain the comparative loss in corn fodder when preserved in the silo or by the ordinary method of curing in the field, the results of ten trials during a period of three years appear to be narrowed down to this: The loss of food materials in either system is very considerable, and shows that fodders cannot be preserved by any method now known without their deteriorating in value.

In the fodder corn as it cut in the fall there is a certain quantity of food elements that may be preserved in a succulent state in the silo or cured and fed to cattle as dry fodder. In either case an equal quantity of the food materials is destroyed, on an average about one-fifth. This loss being equal in either case, the question of which method of preserving fodder corn to adopt becomes one of convenience and economy of feed. The value of these feeding stuffs was about the same for milk and butter production, hence it is concluded the adoption or non-adoption of the silo must be decided on the score of convenience. In some localities the conditions may be more favorable to the field curing system, while in others the uncertainty of weather, the cheapness of lumber or the severity of winter may speak strongly in favor of the system of ensiling the fodder corn.

AMERICAN TIN PLATE.

Enlightenment on This New Industry About to Be Established.

Some time ago samples of American tin plate were sent to certain English journals, asking them to notice this new American industry in their columns. It was thought it would be a matter of interest to them and their readers to know that we were already making tin plate, although the new duty would not go into effect for months to come. A recent mail brings the London Financial Times, with a "notice" in the shape of a column of labored sarcasm and feigned doubt as to whether the sample sent was really American tin plate. It is a significant fact that the London Financial Times raises the same question that our New York Times and other journals which echo British sentiment have raised. We have already fully answered our home papers, but for the benefit of our English contemporaries we will repeat. The piece of tin sent to the Financial Times was made at Demler, Pa., by the United States Iron and Tin Plate company, and this is what Mr. W. C. Cronmeyer, the president of that company, says of it:

"The material used for those plates has been produced from American iron ore; was first turned into pig metal in American blast furnaces; American steel works converted the pig metal into steel billets; the steel billets were rolled into thin sheets of tin; the latter were pickled, or cleaned of scale with American acid, and all the work was done by American workmen (that is, workmen either born in this country or who have by their own free will chosen America as their home).

"The only ingredient contained in those plates which is of foreign origin is the tin used for coating (from 2 1/2 to 5 pounds of foreign tin to every 100 pounds of American steel plates).

"During the last ten years the explanation of the so-called tin plates are not made from tin ore, but from iron ore, and only washed with a light coating of tin, has been so often made by the American press generally that any person who yet talks about the impossibility of making tin plate for want of the tin ore reveals gross ignorance. The bulk of tin used by English manufacturers is imported by them from the Dutch East Indies or from Australia, and we can import it from there as well.

"Yes, the tin plates are as genuinely American as the tin plates imported from Wales are Welsh."

"This showing is good enough in itself, but we can go still further. In the city of Chattanooga a few weeks ago they were celebrating the successful manufacture in the south of basic steel from their ores and from their coal, and on the banquet table for one of the courses every guest had a tin plate made out of their basic steel and coated with the tin ores that came from the Black hills, made in American shops in St. Louis, by American workmen, and it was as good as can be made anywhere in the world. Neither the London Financial Times, the New York Times, nor any other journal at home or abroad, which devotes columns in trying to belittle American industries, can question any longer that we are making tin plate, all of which is American material and labor. We do not claim to be supplying the market. It is over two months yet before the new duty on tin plates will go into effect, and twenty months before our bar tin will be protected. We do claim, however, that we will soon be making so much American tin plate that the $20,000,000 which we have been annually sending to Great Britain will remain at home, and our workmen will be correspondingly benefited. We advise our Free-trade contemporaries to drop the tin plate question and try to propound some harder problem.

You Cannot Fool a Woman.

In a recent number of the Chicago Inter-Ocean Mrs. Elizabeth Hunt, of Bloomington, who speaks for herself and to the point, gives her impressions of the McKinley bill in the following terse language:

"I am a Democrat's wife, but I am sick of seeing such lies as this in newspapers whose editors claim not to be fools. I cut this paragraph out of the Chicago Herald:

"When a woman pays fifty cents more a yard for stuff to make a dress than she would have paid if the McKinley bill had not become a law she should keep it to herself. So doing she will confer a great favor on President Harrison, who thinks that he may get another term in the White House if people will quit making 'malevolent' remarks about the tariff.—New York Times."

Now, don't this fool Democrat who edits The Herald know, or can't his wife tell him, that everything a woman wears costs less than it did before the McKinley bill passed? Calico is four and a half cents per yard; a good summer silk costs from twenty-five to thirty-five cents a yard. It used to cost one dollar. Black silk it could be bought for from sixty cents to one dollar that used to cost from two dollars to three dollars and a half. Sugar costs five cents that used to cost eight cents. Ribbons are half the old price, stockings the same, and jerseys, since they are making them in this country, cost half as much as the imported. Ladies' things are down. We ladies know that Democrat's husbands can lie to each other, but they can't lie to us. We women are not fools. Let The Herald liar stick to men's things when he lies and not try to lie about women's things. We won't stand it. I'm a Democratic woman, but I don't want any lying to keep the party up. We women are not fools. ELIZABETH HUNT.

Of the nations of the world, Germany, France, Russia, Canada, Sweden and Norway, Austro-Hungary and the United States favor Protection. England, New Zealand and New South Wales are in favor of a revenue tariff. There are 450,000,000 people who favor Protection and only 39,000,000 who want Free-trade. To these latter must be added those in our own country who, living under our flag, seem to prefer an other.

An Impossibility.

The Ohio Democrats demand for silver and gold "the equal right of each to free and unlimited coinage." They are precisely the words in which they put their demand, and in this, the Ledger thinks, they have made another grave mistake, if their platform, in this regard, is to set the pattern for the presidential election next year. They are demanding equality for things—silver and gold—which in their very nature are unequal, and which no iteration or reiteration of mere words in the resolves of a political convention, or an act of congress, can make equal. Nothing but an international agreement among the commercial nations of the world can maintain them upon an "equal footing" for the purpose of international commerce. All experience has shown this, and the inequality must continue to exist so long as the production of gold shall be as limited as it actually is—and so long as the power of production of silver is practically "unlimited," as it actually is. In this condition of the production of the "precious metals" there will be and must be fluctuations in value that cannot be overcome by the acts of any one Congress or Parliament, or any other power except redemption in gold or by international agreement, in Philadelphia Ledger.

Don't Boast of Your Ancestors.

How much rot is proudly talked about ancestors! Just stop and think this out. You had two parents and four grandparents. In the third generation behind you your ancestors numbered 8; in the fourth, 16; fifth, 32; sixth, 64; seventh, 128; eighth, 256; ninth, 512; tenth, 1,024. Altogether, during ten generations which may have passed in from 250 to 350 years, 2,048 persons have contributed to your inheritance of health or disease, ability or partial inability. The chances are ten thousand to one that there must have been some great scoundrel in that total of over 2,000 people who have marched in the great procession to the grave, and those very ones may have been the individuals of most powerful personality, so that you, for all I know, may be a very bad character yourself.—There is one caution, however, to offset this dubious outlook, and that is this: According to Dalton, the great student of heredity, the mother's influence upon the offspring is about equal to the total influence of all the other progenitors. But we civilized people seldom take prominently into consideration, in the matter of ancestry, the female line. Some barbaric tribes count that side in descent only. Which is the wiser? Why, according to the authority just quoted, the barbarians are.—Chicago Tribune.

Chills and Fever, Malaria and Ague.

In regular malarial localities there is enough of the poison called malaria generated to produce in all who are not acclimated regular chills and fever. Peruna, in large doses, will break the chills every time. In other localities there is just enough malarial poison to make many people feel indescribably bad without producing regular chills. There will be slight, irregular, chilly sensations, with flashes of heat and cold, clammy perspiration, aching bones and muscles, bad breath and stomach, periodical headache or neuralgia, nervousness, sleeplessness, stupor and weakness. For this condition Peruna is a prompt and positive cure. It rids the system of the poison, builds up the flagging powers, and brings back appetite and sleep. A few weeks' use of the anti-malarial remedy produces such an entire renovation and rejuvenation of the whole body that the patient feels as if he was living in a different world.

THE BASSETT CLAIM.

By HENRY R. ELLIOT

(Copyright by American Press Association.)

"Oh, it's a great secret," she rattled on. "Yes, my heart is not my own, but we have been such good friends, Mr. Bassett; you are so—so splendid! Such a gentleman! Why, I didn't suppose you were in earnest that way, you know. You liked me, of course; I saw that, and we have had such jolly times together, and getting so well acquainted! Do, Mr. Bassett, let us forget what you have said, and let us go on being real good friends."

"Oh, certainly, if you wish," said Windward slowly and coldly. He was thinking of what McArdle had said of the idiotic ambition of the crushed rose of love to be the roast beef of friendship. They two, forsooth, to be "friends" after this! On the morrow he would leave claim, family, city, country, life itself, if necessary, to be free again; the sky was scarcely broad enough to cover them both at once.

"You are not angry, Mr. Bassett?" she said, with a coaxing gesture. "Oh, no," replied Windward, with averted eyes. He spoke calmly and gently, and she pitied him. "Poor fellow," she mused, "he's got it bad!"

They had reached the doorstep, "I feel this very deeply, Miss Willis," said the young man, releasing her arm. "I can't tell you how much. And if I had any chance I'd fight for it, too, like a man."

CHAPTER XX. CONSEQUENCES.

"So I did," said Windward, feeling very foolish.

Windward slunk home like a thief, avoiding the few people he met by a wide turnout, his head down and tears of grief and shame in his eyes. Arrived at the house he found, not much to his liking, the lieutenant and Florence standing in the parking before the porch. They had seen him coming, and now met his approach with a playful volley of reproaches on his suspicious delay. It was poor sport, though, for neither the lieutenant nor Florence seemed quite so easy, and Windward could not disguise his wretchedness, though he attempted to assume jollity and good fellowship. So, after a few forced pleasantries, the three entered the house, Florence restraining her brother with a touch as the lieutenant softly bade them good morning and stole up stairs to bed.

"What is the matter, Windward?" she whispered, leading him just inside the parlor door to the sofa.

"Oh, nothing," grumbled Windward. "Hush," whispered Florence. "Don't disturb Miss Sophia; she sleeps now in the back room. But really, brother, you looked so forlorn. Please tell me; please, Windward."

The poor, lonely, bruised heart melted. "She's refused me!" he murmured, and he buried his face in his hands.

"Why, my dear brother," whispered Floy, putting her arm around her brother's neck. "The horrid little—, tonight, did she?"

Windward nodded assent. "She's just too hateful for anything!" hissed Floy. "I was going to put you on your guard to-morrow. Tut! tut! Well, Windward, dear, it's sad, of course, very sad, but really and truly you're well out of it. She isn't the woman you want, and you'll begin to see it now. She's silly and useless and treacherous, and as to her beauty, she's all made up, and her disposition is horrid; I can see that!"

"Pshaw! it's easy enough to run her down now," muttered Windward. "I never liked her," insisted Floy, "nor mother neither. Fiddlesticks! All that I regret is that you gave her the chance to jilt you. She's a perfect born flirt. I'm provoked at myself for not speaking before. It's my fault, darling, this. Men don't know anything about women, especially if they're the least bit pretty!" Here the other arm stole around his neck, and the dear girl put her sweet, purple lips to his and kissed them sweetly and kindly. "Don't grieve, Windward," she whispered. "It is mortifying, of course, but that will pass away, and you will soon be glad you escaped. I feel bad, of course, but you can't think how much worse I should feel if you had told me she had taken you."

These, somehow, were very comforting words; his pride revived a little; he did not seem so utterly ruined; she might be right.

ing and whispering in the parlor at 1 o'clock in the morning! Well, I did not suppose Florence Bassett was that kind of a girl, but it only shows one can never tell. As for that Lieut. Quire, he is capable of anything. Well, I think the Lord I've escaped his toils. I don't want that sort of a man!"

And in token of her gratitude and joy at her deliverance she cried herself to sleep.

There were sleepy faces at breakfast the next morning, but apparently no unhappy ones. The boarders met with smiles, the common salutations were exchanged, and the dishes were dispatched much as usual. Even the lieutenant got his tidbit as if nothing had happened. Ah, what a potter the world has made about a man in an iron mask! If now we could find anybody without a mask that might be worth mentioning!

As a side dish to the jests and pancakes the servant brought in the morning's mail, and as one item in it a letter to Mr. Bassett from Mr. Blamms. Windward knew the handwriting, and in his passing mood was half inclined to throw the missive unopened into the fire. He quite agreed for the moment with the member that Blamms wrote too many enthusiastic letters. However, he tore open the envelope wearily, and on reading its contents he grew rather interested in the frank tale it told of trouble and anxiety.

"My affairs are despré," he wrote. "I've got to get help somehow. Please tell me if I can place any reliance on the claim. If not let me know the worst at once."

This letter brought matters to a head. "It is," thought Lawyer Bassett, "in the nature of instructions. And Blamms is right. It is time I should give him an answer. It is a fair day; I'll take a walk and think it out—claim, Clara, Quire, and all the rest of 'em."

And in this mind he set out for a long ramble, with his doubts for company; nor did he turn his face again from nature to men until he had traversed with hasty steps much of that lovely wilderness that echoes the murmurs of Rock Creek, and only waits its poet to be famous.

The hard walk cleared his mind and fortified him to see and speak the truth. "I believe I'll throw it up and quit," he soliloquized. "I don't see what good I am here. The longer I work on the claim the more doubtful of success I grow. I have made a terrible blunder in love, and there is that lieutenant dangling after Florence; and she pleased with him, maybe. Stevens has grown so mysterious I can't make him out. He evidently has got something better than the claim and is swinging off. McArdle and the agency can do all the work in that line, anyhow, or if necessary I can run down here occasionally and put in a few words. But I don't see why I should sacrifice the whole winter. It is a pleasant climate, but I doubt if it is as good as it looks. I'm chilly and hot sometimes. I shouldn't wonder if it was malaria."

This mood held till he reached home, so that on getting to his desk he sat down at once and penned the following letter to his client:

"I don't advise you to place any dependence on the claim, as the passage of a bill at this session is very doubtful. I have come to this conclusion reluctantly, but such is my opinion, and so fixed is it that I have about decided to abandon further personal efforts for the present, and leave the business, as heretofore, in the hands of local parties. I really don't think, Mr. Blamms, you do them justice. The agents have worked long and hard, and I can see now why so often with failure meeting them in the end. In fact, my only wonder is that the claims have actually passed congress twice."

"I am very sorry, Mr. Blamms, that I feel obliged to make such a discouraging report. My own stake is larger than yours, and I am anxious to get it, but I think our chances so slight that I advise you to look elsewhere for resources, and for my own part I have about decided to return to New York and the practice of my profession."

"Poor Blamms!" thought Windward, as he sealed the letter; "that will sicken him. But it is the truth, and as for me I don't propose to drag along here in a kind of staminate life between a flirt and a claim—that's another flirt. I'll go back to New York, where there is real business, and fine women, too. It is true, as Floy says, that Clara 'makes up,' even I can see that, as so many of the girls do around here, painting and powdering and what not. I don't like it; it looks 'fast.' Now and then you meet a lady like Miss Sheffield—by the way, I've a notion to talk this over with her. Probably Clara will tell her if I don't. Fury! Must I go all over town as her last conquest? It can't be true she is so heartless, but I see now McArdle was putting me on my guard. An odd man that!"

He had brushed the dust from his clothes by this time and now pushed forth again in the direction of Col. McArdle's residence. It was about noon when he called, a little early for visitors, and he found Louise, as he had hoped, alone. She received him cordially as usual, and began by asking him how he had liked the play.

"Why, has Miss Willis been here?" he stammered out, blushing hot and red.

"No," replied Louise, noticing his confusion, but not twitting him upon it. "But you mentioned you were going the other day."

"So I did," said Windward, feeling very foolish. "Well," thought he, "it might be as well to blurt it right out at once; here goes."

"Miss Sheffield," he exclaimed, hanging his head, "I spoke to her last night, and she won't have me!"

"Why, Mr. Bassett?" said Louise, getting up and taking a seat close at his side. "Is that so? Well, I'm very sorry—for her." And as she spoke she laid a hand on his and looked into his downcast face with almost a motherly solicitude and affection.

then when I, or rather my uncle, and speak were—didn't think you were particularly pleased."

Windward was silent. He saw he was no match for these people. He would change the subject.

"I think, Miss Sheffield," he said, "I will give up working the claim. My trouble with Miss Willis unsettles me, of course, and I want to leave town on that account; but apart from that, I see I am of very little use here, and I can do as much by occasional visits as by constantly dining at congress. I believe there are a good many members like your uncle; if you talk too much to them they are all apt to grow a little hard of hearing."

"Perhaps," said Louise with a smile. "Well, I shall be really sorry to lose you, Mr. Bassett, but I understand better than you do, probably, how sensible your decision is—if you have decided."

"Not yet," said Windward, "but my mind tends that way, especially after last night's trouble. And I should go the more readily as our interests are so well cared for." He accented the "our" as if to call attention to the word.

"Our interests?" said Louise inquiringly.

"Yes," replied Windward, with a careless air, "but watching her keenly. You know you have a little interest in the claims, too."

"What, I?" exclaimed Louise, bewildered. "How so?"

"Oh," said Windward, rather confused, "I mean you, of course, are interested in the colonel's success, and he would make handsomely if the bill passed."

"Oh, certainly," Louise replied, assuming a satisfaction in the answer she could not feel. "I don't think he meant just that," she mused, "and I wonder what he did mean." The doubt made her silent and constrained for the moment, and Windward on his part fidgeted uneasily, so that there was an awkward pause.

"Yes," said Windward finally, clearing his throat, "the claims will get along just as well without me. There is your uncle, who knows all about them and about congress, and there is the agent, an extraordinary man, Miss Sheffield, an invalid, but a dauntless being, who fights from his bed and says he shall not die till the claims are passed."

"Indeed!" exclaimed Louise. "I should like to know him. Bedridden, do you say? Almost? Could I do anything for her? He must be an interesting character."

"Very," said Windward. "He has no end of pluck, and personally he is very agreeable and winsome."

"I would like to know," said Louise. "I think now I've heard my uncle speak of him. Suppose we call on him some day, and cheer him up with flowers and so forth. That would be helping, I'm sure."

"Very well," said Windward. "I should be delighted. Say I call to-morrow afternoon and take you to the agency?"

"That will suit me; but you are not going?"

"Yes," said Windward, "or you'll be getting hard of hearing too."

"Don't tell anybody about that," she said, shaking her finger at him, and added, more seriously, "nor the other matters."

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria. When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria. When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria. When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

"He has grown more so of late years," she replied, "and I don't mind telling you that it is largely due to the care he is obliged to take of his health. He suffers from an affection of the heart of such a nature that any sudden extreme of emotion, either of joy or sorrow, would probably prove fatal. He has accustomed himself, therefore, to a stoicism, though to be sure it comes easily to him, as it fits his nature. His 'telegraphic brevity,' as no doubt you have heard him explain, is due chiefly to the value he sets on time and speech, but he was always a silent man. For years—"

"and here the narrator smiled merrily—"he pretended to be a little deaf, so as the better to ward off volubility, and he suffers from occasional attacks even yet. It used to be very amusing sometimes. The longer his tormentor talked the deader he would grow, till he got him fairly shouting, and so actually wore him out."

"Quite a scheme," laughed Windward. "Yes, I've had many a laugh over it. I could always tell when he was bored. 'Excuse me,' he would say, 'I am a little hard of hearing.' That would set me off tittering. Alas, I'm past the tittering age now!"

"And I am glad of it," exclaimed Windward. "And speaking of tittering reminds me of Miss Willis."

"Why, Mr. Bassett?" said Louise demurely, "so soon? Remember, you have a week."

"Well, I don't care. She has a laugh that is half way between a giggle and a snicker. Oh, I like it, though!" he added, resolved on sadness.

"You haven't told me anything about it," said Louise, who no doubt felt she had a right after her own confessions to hear those of her friend.

"Why," said Windward, with a hang-dog air, "she said she didn't suppose, and so forth and so on, and hoped we should always be friends, you know, and she said she was engaged."

"Engaged?" exclaimed Louise. "Well, that was to be a secret; I forgot," said Windward, looking sheepish.

"Oh, a secret," Louise spoke so scornfully that Windward looked at her for an explanation.

"Why," he asked, reading her expression, "don't you believe it?"

"Oh, she may be," said Louise. "She is, off and on, most of the time."

"You ought to have told me more about her at first," said Windward, coloring deeply and looking down.

"That is so," Louise replied frankly. "I should, and I own my fault. But I hate gossip, and I didn't suppose till very lately that you were in any danger. And
