The Questions of Currency. ANN ARBOR, Aug. 24, 1893.

To Editor of THE REGISTER :

We cannot reach perfectly accurate conclusions in the discussion of the currency questions. No two nations are exactly alike in any particular, and the constant and almost infinitely varying conditions in the internal affairs of this nation, render perfectly accurate mental deductions impossible. We can, however, by discussion and mutual interchange of views, clear up some of the intricaces involved. What, then, is the basic principal of a sound currency? It is not to issue more promises to pay, than the nation or the individual can meet under any possible circumstances. That is perfectly sound finance. But we must have some coined metal as a basis of international money values; something to measure other currency by. The civilized nations have adopted gold for this purpose. Why have they adopted gold? Mainly because to issue and coin a piece of this metal not so large as a silver five cent piece, costs about one dollar's worth of labor. A small gold dollar represents a dollar's worth of human labor. Either providentally or by accident, gold is so scarce a metal, that probably a dollar's worth of labor will never represent a very large piece of this metal. This makes it a valuable medium of exchange on account of the facility of transportation.

Compare gold with other metals. Twenty dollars in gold weighs (troy) a little more than one ounce, one dollar in silver weighs a little less than one ounce and one dollar's worth of lead weighs twelve and a half pounds. It costs about eight hours labor to mine and coin a dollar in gold; about two and a half hours labor to mine and coin a dollar of silver; and a very small fraction of a day would mine a dollar's worth of lead. We see at once that we must reject lead as a coin metal; for a lady would have to load a freight train in order to do an ordinary day's shopping. It might decrease shopping omewhat, and be a valuable reformer in that regard, but would be very unpopular with the ladies and the mer-

The distinction between a paper currency and coin is, that coin has a fixed intrinsic value independant of the government that puts its stamp upon it, while paper, either as bank bills or as promissory notes, are only good while the nation or the individual who issues them, remains financially responsible. A purchasing medium or currency may be coin or bank bills, promissory notes, etc. A promissory note payable to bearer may practically be used as money and often is so used. What, then, gives this circulating medium called money its value? In the case of coin, it is the decree of the business men of the ivilized nations. Their decree fixes it, because, in all international trade and commerce, the fixed values will prevail and govern all purchases and sales. As the home traffic is intimately related to and rests largely upon international traffic, the coin values fixed by the civilized nations will govern in the home traffic. What determines the face value of bank bills and promissory notes? It is the financial standing of the bank or individuals who issue the bills and notes. In the case of national bonds or bills, it is the financial standing of the nation, that keeps its paper at par.

Why, then, is it necessary to have coin at all? Why not use bank or nadonal bills as a circulating medium? It is because international trade requires a circulating medium good in all nations. Green-backs are good in this nation, but the Russian merchant might doubt their stability A human government is not stable beyond question. The bank bills of this nation are good as long as the taxing power remains to raise money to pay them, and no longer. Foreign merchants will not eceive for their goods a currency that depends upon the uncertain existence of a government. Gold has a fixed and intrinsic value independant of the taxing power of any or all nations and governments. Gold, therefore, must be the currency for international trade and commerce. If the civilized nations would adopt silver as international currency at some relative value with gold, then it might also be used for this purpose. But until this is done, the silver used by each nation or government will stand upon the same footing and be governed by the same rules as the bonds and bank bills issued by that nation. This must be so, because, internationally, silver has no intrinsic | met before, and which we are inclined value independent of the government that issues it, except its bullion value which will not be large, if the present excessive output is continued. This being so, the issuing of silver currency by an ation in no way differs from the issuing of paper money. It will not increase or strengthen the gold basis, because, as to other nations, it is not a

The issue of silver will increase the amount of the circulating medium; but will not add to its actual value. The gold standard will be the ultimate measure of its value. When silver is offered to the foreign merchant he takes it, if at all, at a discount that will make it realize the same to him as gold. In home trade it works differently, but with the same result. If a silver or paper dollar is offered to a merchant for goods, he takes it for a dollar; but he charges enough more for his goods to bring the transaction to the gold standard. When the currency is inflated everything purchased goes up in price. At the close of the war, with an inflated currency, we paid sixty cents per yard for cotton goods and three dollars per bushel for wheat and at a similar rate for every-

It is a safe maxim in regard to currency, as everything else that it is exceedingly difficult to make something out of nothing. I think this government is keeping within proper limits when it refuses to bolster up the price of silver or any other commodity by forcing the people to pay a premium for it, either directly or indirectly.

I never knew a man who could lift himself over a fence by tugging at his boot straps. It is the height of folly for a government to compel its people to pay inflated prices for their own productions. It is like the old New England farmer going to mill on horseback, who put a stone in one end of the bag to ballance the grain in the other end. It is not good economy or good sense to carry an extra weight when we can as easily put half the grain in either end of the bag.

Respectfully, N. W. CHEEVER.

The Financial Situation.

The stringency of the times was the subject of a conversation last Saturday between a representative of The Reg-ISTER and one of our well known business men. In this talk THE REGISTER was given the benefit of a new theory, which, its seems to us, as it was explained to our representative, is a good one. The gentleman said that one of the important features in the many elements which operate to bring about such times was the course taken by small depositors. At the present time the small depositors constitute a very important factor in the financial world. They are the ones who precipitate "hard times," by at once, whenever there is a flurry in the business world, rushing to the banks and drawing out their savings. This has two bad effects: First, it takes from the avenues of business just that much of the circulating medium. Second, and, far more important, it reduces very considerably the bank's reserve and thus makes it practically impossible for the banks to accommodate business men, most of whom depend upon short time loans to carry on their business. As a result of this, confidence is destroyed, and this prevents the use of many kinds of commercial paper, which at once blocks the wheels of commerce. The gentleman said to the representative of THE REGISTER that he believed the whole trouble which resulted from such a source, could be readily avoided by a law requiring the banks to give their depositors some kind of security for their deposits, more than merely their bank books. Any bank, he said, which was doing a legitimate business, as was the case with almost all of them, could easily do this without much inconvenience and with practically no additional expense. His plan was to have the banks place in the hands of some reliable person of the city, appointed, let us say, by the state bank examiner, the securities which the bank holds for the money which it has taken on deposit and has loaned out. Let this person then sign a note which savings depositors could hold, as a guarantee that their savings would not be lost even if the bank should fail. Under such a regime depositors would not be induenced by any rumors about bank failures. This would, almost without exception, prevent runs on banks or the tendency of small depositors to draw out their savings whenever they heard or read of a bank failure. This would, in turn, enable the banks to accommodate business men at the very time when they most need it. This could be depended upon with perfect ally no danger of a run on any bank thus securing its depositors. This is an idea which we have not assurance as there would be practicto believe is a good one. We do not mean to imply by this that we think that, as a rule, there is any real need of such a course from a lack of any ordinary bank's responsibility. It would act merely as a safeguard to give confidence to timid people and would save a vast amount of trouble to both banks and business men.

GERMAN-AMERICAN DAY.

Ap Immense Concourse of Patriotic German-American Citizens Gathered at Saline last Thursday and Cele-

Fully three thousand five hundred people, if not more, of our German-American citizens met and enjoyed a day of festivities as only a German can. Early in the morning the crowd began to gather and they kept on coming until the streets of Saline had the biggest crowd in the history of the town. The procession in the morning was a well arranged affair. In this the Ann Arbor Rifles played a conspicuous part. In fact it would be difficult to find a more popular set of young men than were the boys who belong to this company. Everybody was clearly bent on having a "glorious good time." and from all appearances there were no exceptions to the rule. The refreshment stands did a thriving business. It is understood that enough money was cleared to pay up the debt on the picnic grounds. People seemed to have plenty of money. One would scarcely think that the times were hard judging from how freely the money flowed from hand to hand on this occasion.

At the meeting of the delegates it was decided to hold next year's celebration in Chelsea.

THE ARTHUR CASE SETTLED.

The Ann Arbor Railroad Withdraws Its Conspiracy Suit.

The famous personal damage suit against Peter M. Arthur, chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. commenced last March immediately after the strike of engineers on the Ann Arbor Railroad, has been settled. What the terms of the settlement are the public will probably never know The suit has simply been withdrawn, and the attorneys for both sides, as well as the officials of the railroad company, are silent as to the terms. Arthur was charged with conspiracy in ordering a boycott of Ann Arbor freight on that road and connecting lines, and the court was asked to award plaintiff the sum of $300,000. The settlement of the suit does not do away with the possibility of a final opinion on the important question as to whether or not a brotherhood or union is in itself a conspiracy against the tion of the country again. law.—Detroit Journal.

The Conscience Fund.

An account designated as the "Conscience Fund" was opened by the register of the treasury to show from time to time the receipts of moneys by the United States government from unknown persons. These moneys are covered into the general treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and may be used like other assets of the treasury for any purpose that congress may deem proper.

The account was opened in 1811, and up to March 31, 1893, there had been received in large and small sums, the aggregate amount of $266,089.56.

Remittances are received almost weekly; occasionally the receipts are two or three cases a week, and, as a rule, the letters are not signed. Frequently they are forwarded by clergymen at the request of penitents. As nearly all the communications are anonymous, acknowledgments are always made through the local press .-Washington Star.

Labor Congress.

Good results are expected from the meeting of the World's Fair Labor Congress to be held in Chicago. This congress will be addressed by a number of eminent speakers such as Henry George, of New York; Prof. H. C. Adams, of Michigan; Senator Peffer and Jerry Simpson, of Kansas; Eugene Delahay, of Paris, a French political economist; Samuel Gompers, and others connected with labor movements throughout the world. They will discuss the problems appertaining to the subject of labor. This labor congress is looked upon with considerable interest on account of the great number of unemployed people, and the general situation and depression in labor circles just now.

Attempted Robery.

Prof. Hall, director of the observatory, had an exciting experience last Saturday night. On his way home from the city he was held up at the point of a revolver and his pockets searched. Fortunately, the Prof. had no money with him and his assailant was obliged to give up empty handed.

Mrs. N. H. Pierce died on Saturday night at 11:25 o'clock, of cancer of the liver. The funeral services were held Tuesday at 4 o'clock P. M.

Mrs. Pierce was one of the best known women in Ann Arbor. She was born in Watertown, Jefferson county, N. Y., May 16, 1828. With her parents she moved to Detroit in 1835 and three years later they took up their residence in Ann Arbor. August 4, 1847, she was married to N. H. Pierce.

When about 16 years of age Mrs. Pierce developed considerable literary talent and her writings were much sought after by the papers of the city and state as well as by "The Ladies Repository." Some years since she published a series of article entitled "Ann Arbor in Slices" in the Ann Arbor Courier, which attracted a great deal of attention. Mrs. Pierce always took a leading part in philanthropic work. She was the founder of the Fifth Ward Decoration Society, and for many years was its president. This society started out in 1870 with little money, but with a strong determination succeeded in raising the money for the erection of the soldiers' monument which now stands in the Fifth Ward Cemetery.

In the year 1880 Mrs. Pierce was census enumerator of the Fifth and Sixth wards. She received a letter from the bureau commending her work in the highest terms.

Mrs. Pierce was a prominent member of the Washtenaw County Pioneer Society, and the county history says, 'She has probably done more work and toiled longer for the benefit of the organization than any other of its lady members."

For many years she was a practicing magnetic physician, in 1883 taking out the necessary papers under the state law. Some four years ago when returning from a sick call she received a a severe fall which caused the disease from which she died.

Three children survive her, Mrs. J. B. Saunders, Edward H. and N. H. Pierce, jr. She leaves a large circle of friends and relatives who will greatly miss her .- Times.

RIOT IN CHICAGO.

Trouble Results from a Parade of Unemployed Men-Policemen Wounded

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.-The parade of the unemployed Saturday ended in a riot on Washington street near the city hall Inspector Ross and four policemen were knocked down with stones and clubs. Victor Horovitz and Joseph Wenzel were clubbed by the officers and locked up for rioting. A meeting been held on the lake front and the procession of 2,000 men marched toward the city hall on Washington street. More than half had passed La Salle street when a man with a buggy got in the way. The buggy was overturned and the owner thrown out. A United States mail wagon was going through the crowd and was stopped. Police offi-cers rushed forward and the fight began. Inspector Ross came up, and a stone thrown by a rioter struck him on the head and knocked him down. Sergt. Swift and Patrolmen Gratier, Larkin and Mitchell were struck and sustained painful injuries. More officers came up, and headed by Inspector Ross charged on the crowd and dispersed it. A general alarm had been turned in and a dozen patrol wagons filled with officers arrived at the city hall too late to render assistance.

Mayor Harrison immediately went out to the lake front, where another meeting was being held. He told the crowd that the law must be obeyed and was cheered. He said he sympathized with the men out of employment, but they should be patient. He warned them that incendiary speeches must not be made, and when he returned to the city hall he gave orders that no more street parades be permitted.

THE GRAIN CROPS.

Estimate of the Yield in Various Countries Throughout the World.

BUDA PESTH, Aug. 28.—The annual report of the Hungarian minister of agriculture has appeared. Its estimate of the world's production of wheat this year is 2,279,000,000 bushels, against the official average of 2,280,000,000 annually for the last ten years. report says the deficits to be filled by the importing countries will require 870,000,000 bushels. The surplus available in exporting countries to satisfy this demand is 378,664,000 bushels. The world's product of rye is given as 485,-000,000 hectoliters.

The yield of wheat in North America is estimated as 382,000,000 bushels: the yield of rye as 24,383,000 bushels, and the yield of maize as 1,809,000 bushels.

A VETERAN'S VERDICT

The War is Over. A Well-known Soldier, Correspondent and Journalist Makes a Disclosure.

ist Makes a Disclosure.

Indiana contributed her thousands of brave soldiers to the war, and no state bears a better record in that respect than it does. In literature it is rapidly acquiring an enviable place. In war and literature Solomon Yeweil, well known as a writer as "Sol," has won an honorable position. During the late war he was a member of Co. M., 2d. N. Y. Cavalry and of the 13th Indiana Infantry Volunteers. Regarding an important circumstance he writes as follows:

"Several of us old veterans here are using Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Heart Cure and Nerve and Liver Pills, all of them giving splendid satisfaction. In fact, we have never used remedies that compare with them. Of the Pills we must say they are the best combination of the qualities required in a preparation of their nature we have ever known. We have none but words of praise for them. They are the outgrowth of a new principle in medicine, and tone up the system wonderfully. We say to all, try these remedies."

—Solomon Yewell, Marion, Ind., Dec. 5, 1892. These remedies are sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles $5, express prepaid. They positively contain neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Confidence Seems to Be Returning in the Commercial World.

New York, Aug. 26.-R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "The improvement observed last week has become much more distinct and general. While actual transactions have increased but little, the change in public feeling is noteworthy. There are fewer failures, either of banks or of important commercial or manufacturning concerns, than for some weeks past Many disasters have been avoided by a more general pooling of resources and a greater spirit of mutual helpfulness and forbearance than were tual helpfulness and forbearance than were seen some weeks ago. One large stock failure for several million was thus prevented in Wall street Thursday, and the market for securities, though at times depressed by closing of heavy loans, has been extremely dull without mate-rial decline.

Money on call is more abundant and lower, as many interior loans have been paid since the banks ceased to send currency away and advanced their rates for renewing or extending such loans, but there is little relief as re and the secretary of the treasury in answer and the secretary of the treasury in answer to an inquiry has stated that no legal objec-tion exists to the use of sight drafts on New York for small sums in payment of hands. The difficulty of collections and the interruption of exchanges are nearly as serious as ever.

"The number of industrial establishments resuming begins to compare fairly with the number stopping work. It cannot as yet be said that the army of unemployed has begun to decrease, but the additions to it are much smaller than in previous weeks. Many re-sumptions only show that the stoppage was really temporary or that wave controversies. really temporary or that wage controversies have been settled. ### PERFECT HEALTH

HOW IT WAS OBTAINED.

ACROSS THE PLAINS IN '52.

A GOLD MINER DISCOVERS SOMETHING MORE PRECIOUS THAN GOLD. A REMEDY FOR RHEUMATISM AND KIDNEY TROUBLE WHICH WORKED WONDERS, AFTER EVERY OTHER REMEDY, INCLUDING A "SWEAT" TREATMENT WITH THE INDIANS FOR A YEAR, HAD FAILED TO RELIEVE.

A STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

CROOK CITY, S. D., Jan. 22, 1892.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co., Chicago, Ill.:

GENTLEMEN—I have been for some time considering the propriety of writing to you a few lines, relative to my experience with the Owen Electric Belt and Appliance obtained from you about eighteen (18) months ago. Justice to your company, and a desire on my part to make known to others who may be suffering from a similar affliction the relief I obtained from your institution, prompt me to send to you a voluntary statement of my case.

I am a gold miner by occupation, and have been for many years. I crossed the plains to California in 1852, and since then have been in most of the prominent mining camps in the then territories of Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, and at present in Dakota. Leading the rough and exposed life incidental to my occupation, caused me to fall a victim to rheumatism which finally utterly prostrated me in Helena, Mont., in "65." I was under the best medical treatment obtainment of the programment and was finally advised to able in Montana for one year, with but slight improvement, and was finally advised to live among the Indians, and subject myself to their "sweat" treatment. This I did and remained with them about a year, obtaining only temporary relief.

Since that time I have been a chronic sufferer—suffering pain and torture indescribable almost continually. It would be useless to attempt to describe my sufferings. It must be sufficient to state that I suffered from rheumatism in its worst form. I had spent large sums of money, changed climate, visited Hot Springs, lived alternately in high and low altitudes, and employed the best medical advice obtainable, hoping to alleviate, if not cure my complaint. It was all to no purpose, and I had about despaired of ever recovering fully my shattered health, when my attention was called to the Owen Electric Belt by a fellow miner, Mr. J. C. Johnson, of Creek City, who was also suffering from rheumatism, and who claimed to have derived great benefit from a belt obtained from you. I had tried so many remedies that I was fairly discouraged and skeptical about obtaining relief from any source, but finally determined it was my duty to give your appliance a trial. I will also state right here that, since coming to the town, I have also suffered greatly from kidney disease.

At last I sent for one of your belts, and applied it carefully, according to the printed directions accompanying the same, and can now truthfully say, as I now do to you, that I am no longer troubled with my kidneys, that I am entirely free from rheumatism, and I consider my health as perfect. All this I consider is owing to your valuable and priceless Owen Electric Belt, and I feel I am only performing a duty and paying a deserved tribute to Dr. Owen in sending this unsolicited statement of my case for his information. Sincerely your friend,

THE proposition that the "Pingree idea" of issuing bonds in small amounts be applied in the issuing of the Afin Arbor sewer bonds seemed at first to be a good one. The plan, however, does not seem to work in Detroit in the sale of school bonds in small denominations. In fact it fell with a dull and heavy thud.

BRADSTREETS, the leading authority on commercial matters, states that eight hundred manufacturing establishments have been closed in this country since June 1st, and that 500,-000 operatives were thus deprived of employment. Bradstreets has taken pains to ascertain the causes which have induced these establishments to shut down. Six per cent. were due to usual summer vacations, three per cent. to fires, two per cent. to disputes about wages. This accounts for eleven per cent. of the suspensions and leaves eigty-nine per cent. to be explained. Of these seventy-nine per cent. are ascribed to the financial depression of the times. These figures are an eloquent exortation to the speech-makers in -congress, the majority of whom are speaking for buncomb, to stop their idle speeches and take action. Not a vote will be changed by this oratory and the country needs and demands an immediate settlement of the financial question. Certainty must take the place of uncertainty before there can be substantial improvement.

Since writing the above we are pleased to note that the House has placed itself on record as favoring the repeal of the silver purchase act. Now let the Senate stop, its talk and do as

THE bitter fight of the honest people of the state of Louisiana has delivered that state from the disgrace of the great lottery, but it does not propose to let go its hold on the United States. It has lately obtained a concession and charter in the little Central American State of Honduras, and will open out there, where it will be big enough to own the whole country. The government grants the company the Island of Guanaja and concedes free of cost all lands which may be required for its offices througout the little republic. The company is also granted the right to lay a cable line from the Island of Guanaja or from any point on the coast of Honduras to the United States or Europe, and to establish a steamship line from any or all ports on the coast of Honduras to any part of the world. All articles belonging to the company are admited free of duty, its employes are exempt from military service, and it is exempt from all taxes. For the privileges granted to it the lottery company is to pay the government $1,000,000 annually and a graduated percentage of from one to three per cent. on the face value of all tickets sold. It is reported that the company will establish a steamship line to Tampa, Florida, and from that point continue its business in the United States. To suppress this abominable octopus will require the most careful work of some able statesman. It is a most important question, and the earlier it receives attention the

Electric Freight Engines.

The three electric locomotives being constructed by the General Electric company to haul cars through the Belt railroad tunnel are nearly completed. The machinery is about finished, and the generators are well under way. The Tocomotives will be of 1,200 horsepower each and will consist of three separate trucks coupled together to form one motor. The weight on drivers will be 100 tons, and the number of drivers to each locomotive will be 12. The maximum weight of freight trains to be hauled is placed at 1,200 tons, which can be carried at a speed of 15 miles an hour; maximum weight of passenger train, 500 tons; speed, 30 miles an hour.

Each axle of the locomotive has mounted upon it a gearless motor flexibly connected to the driving wheels, and means are provided for controlling the motors and commutating them, so that high efficiency can be attained at nearly all rates of speed by running the motors either in series, multiple series or multiple, according to the load to be hauled and speed desired. The current will be supplied to the motors from the generators by the regular trolley wire, with ground return through the rails. Where switches and sidings occur special arrangements will be made to prevent the trolley by any chance from jumping the wire .-Baltimore American.

Washouts In Arizona

The last place on earth from which one would expect to hear of railroad washouts, especially at this season of the year, is Arizona. That region has a reputation for aridity that is unequaled on the continent. It is generally considered a land of perpetual drought. It scarcely ever rains there at any season, and in the summer time rain is regarded as something unnatural.

But it has been raining like fury during the last few days in Arizona. The downpour has extended to New Mexico, and there have even been heavy showers on the Mohave desert in California. In Arizona the freshets have been so violent that numerous washouts have occurred along the line of the Southern Pacific. Between Gila Bend and Lordsburg, N. M., track, trestles, embankments and bridge approaches have been Three engines have been ditched and temporarily disabled. In consequence of these mishaps trains are delayed and traffic generally interrupted. Yesterday General Superintendent Fillmore was principally occupied in reading telegrams informing him of fresh damages and anathemating Arizona for being such an infernally contrary country.

As usually happens in arid lands, the recent rains in the desert region between Yuma and Deming have partaken of the nature of cloudbursts. The tempest breaks with sudden fury, and the rain falls in torrents, swelling every dry ravine into the proportions of rushing streams.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Getting Fun Out of Politics.

The truth is, people must either fight or laugh, and we prefer to laugh. Once in awhile partisans get into a hot debate and break the furniture, but as a general thing we take matters good humoredly, and if a reporter is really witty we smile as broadly as circumstances permit. It is very interesting, therefore, to read the comments of our contemporaries. Here is The Tribune, for instance, with a choice variety of four line squibs every morning full of ridicule of the other fellow. It has a specialist who extracts all the wasp stings that can be found and furnishes a daily dish drowned in pepper sauce. Some of them make delicious reading, not because they are true, but because they are bright.

Then comes The Sun, sly old orb, with a wink in its left eye and a simulated expression of unappeasable indignation, and pokes the enemy under the fifth rib in such a way that the rib is of no fur-ther use. The Evening Post is always on horseback, and seldom a day passes that it doesn't plant its iron hoof on some one, and The Commercial Advertiser thinks that day lost "whose low descending sun" does not look back on some Democrat whom it has jabbed.

All this is agreeable, instructive and interesting to everybody, except the political victims. The people road and grin and enjoy a perfect picnic whenever there is a party struggle on the car-pet.—New York Telegram.

His Carriage Driven by Naphtha. C. L. Simonds of Lynn has made a steam carriage for his own use that will make 10 miles an hour. The carriage weighs only 400 pounds and can carry two persons at a time. It has the appearance of an ordinary carriage in front, except there are no provisions made for a horse. The wheels are of cycle make and are four in number. The hind wheels are 43 inches, and the front wheels are 36 inches, with rubber tires. The boiler and engine are just in the rear of the seat and give the carriage the appearance of a fire engine. The steam generates in what is called a porcupine boiler, which weighs 100 pounds. The steam is made by naphtha flames from three jets. The naphtha is kept in a cylinder, enough to last for seven hours, and there is a water tank that will hold 10 gallons. The steering part consists of a crank wheel on the footboard, so that the engineer can steer and attend to the engine at the same time.-Boston

Escaped Lion Caught by an Elephant.

An exciting and remarkable scene occurred yesterday at Barnsley, where Day's menagerie is being exhibited. The manager states that about 4 o'clock Bartlett, the keeper, accidentally left the door of a cage containing young lions unfastened. Bartlett was afterward surprised to see one of the lions loose. Happily no spectators were in the show at the time. The keeper immediately armed himself and sent for aid. Blank cartridges were fired to keep the lion at bay. Luckily, it came within reach of a powerful elephant named Jumbo II, who was fenced off by means of ropes and stakes in one corner of the show. The elephant seized the lion with his trunk round the body, and placing his foot upon him held him down. The keepers, who had secured ropes, noosed them, and putting them on the lion's legs secured and dragged him into the cage.-Westminster Gazette.

Oysters Beginning to Bud.

Some oyster shells have been dredged up that, when examined under the microscope, revealed what seemed to be a heavy set, although the oysters are about the size of the head of a pin. The weather is perfect for a good set, and there is no apparent reason why this should not be a good year for the oystermen.-New Haven Palladium.

A Singular State of Affairs.

Doubtless it is in the interest of the welfare of all our people that banks, the doors of which are open for business and which are ready to receive deposits, have flatly refused to honor the checks of their depositors notwithstanding they have the money with which to pay them, but it is a most singular state of affairs, and the docility with which the depositors have accepted the situation is sur-

The contract between the bank and the depositor provides that the bank will take charge of the depositor's funds and pay them out on the depositor's check. The assumption that the bank may at any time, in the exercise of its own discretion, forcibly withhold the depositor's property from him is not contemplated by the terms of the contract usually made between the parties. The de-positor has not authorized the bank to do more or anything else than care for his money and pay it out on his check.

Under ordinary circumstances the refusal of a bank to honor the check of its depositor when it admits that the money is in its possession and belongs to the depositor, would be accepted as an evidence that the bank is itself bankrupt. This method of preventing a run on the bank is certainly quite effective.

The good spirit in which the depositor accepts the inconvenience to which he is thus subjected is a strong evidence of that public spirit which may save the community from irreparable disaster. At the same time it is worthy of remark that no pugnacious crank has as yet asked the intervention of the courts to compel the bank to give him his money.

—New York Advertiser.

The Horn Fly.

Kansas farmers are complaining of a new pest known as the horn fly-so called from its habit of resting on the horns of cattle-from whence it moves to various parts of the body, piercing the skin with its serrate proboscis and sucking the animal's blood. Its habits are not only annoying, but exceedingly harmful. The pest was unknown here a year ago, but is now one of the most abundant and hurtful of the fly species. Professor Kellogg of the state university says it is a native of Europe, and was probably introduced into America with a shipment of cattle from France. It was first observed in New Jersey in September, 1887. In October, 1888, it was in Maryland. In 1889 it had traveled south and west over Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, and in 1890 it was wonderfully active, appearing in Kentucky. By the end of 1891 it got as far as New York and west to Ohio, south to Florida and Mississippi. In 1892 it was noticed in Illinois and is now found in Kansas and other western states. An effort will be made to prevent a farther spread of the pest by the same process now used in exterminating chinch bugs. -St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A SURE TRING. Old Cases of Malaria Need no Longer be Invalids.

There is no trying to dodge the fact that quinine will not always cure malaria. While it is doubtless true that large doses of quinine or some other derivative of Calisaya bark will cure more cases of chills and fever than any other drug, it is equally certain that in chronic malaria it is, in a majority of cases, a flat failure. In every malarious district there are thousands of people who continually take quinine and yet nually have more or less frequen attacks of malaria. These facts need no argument. Every person who lives in a malarious locality knows them to

A remedy capable of curing these cases of chronic malaria that quinine will not relieve would be a great blessing to humanity and produce a genuine sensation in medical circles. This is exactly what the remedy-Pe-ru-nawill do. It cures all those old and stubborn cases of chronic malaria that have taken quinine perhaps for years without result. A thorough course of Peru-na is sure to remove the malarial poison from the system.

A publication containing the latest information concerning the nature and origin of malarial poison and the cure of malaria in all its forms is being sent to malarial sufferers in all parts of the civilized world by The Pe-ra-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus Ohio. It will be sent free to any addres for a limited time.

The Destroying Crickets In Idaho. The onward march of the crickets in Idaho is described by the correspondents as something more terrible to the farmers than an army with banners. The little pests made their appearance in northern Idaho in May and have been moving toward the south and east ever since, eating every blade of grain and grass on the way and even destroying the foliage and fruit. The farmers have been crush ing them with rollers, burning them with sage brush fires and roasting them as they swim across the rivers and ditches with burning oil, but they still move on by millions, undaunted by the slaughter and undismayed by anything except a lack of verdure. Just how far they are

LITERARY NOTES.

Scribner's Magazine for August is a fiction number and has a number of very delightful stories. Among the authors are as such well known favorites as Grace E. Channing Howard Pyle, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Sarah Orne Jewett and Willian Henry Shelton. This number would be a most delightful one to read on a journey or during ones summer vacation.-Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, N. Y.

The frontispiece of the August Magazine of Art is a very delicate etching, "Dittisham-on-the-Dart," the original by David Law. Prof. Hubert Herkomer contributes part one of a paper on T. W. North, A. R. A. The paper was delivered as a lecture at Oxford, Eng. last year. Street Balconies in North Italy is a charmingly illustrated article by H. E. Lidmarsh. The usual departpartments are exceptionally well illustrated and full of interesting items,-Cassell Pub. Co., New York, N. Y.

The first article in the August Book Buyer is a biography of Mrs. O. W. Oliphant so well known by the large number of pleasing novels she has given to the general reader. She has been equally successful-in history and biography as her life of St. Frances of Assisi and of Count Charles de Montalembert and "The Literary History of England in the End of the Eighteenth and Beginning of the Nineteenth Century's will show. The biographies published monthly are a very pleasant leature of the Book Buyer, often putting together as they do in connected form, facts about living authors apt to be gathered piece-meal from many sources.-Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, N. Y. $1.00

The Arena for August devotes considerable space to the financial problems now confronting the nation and gives its readers several papers, one by Senator Stewart, of Nevada, on monometallism, Revolutionary and Distinctive, and another by W. H. Standish of N. Dakota on "The Financial Problem," in which the policy of Pres. Cleveland is denounced as looking toward the demonetization of Silver, while A. C. Fisk mentions "Some Important Problems for Congress to deal with in its Extra Session." The Bacon-Shakespears Case has the verdicts of six more prominent literary men. Among them, Edmund C. Steadman, Edmund Gosse, and Professors A. E. Dolhear and N. S. Shaler .- Arena Pub. Co., Copley Square, Boston, Mass.

We have just received "The Best Things to See and How to Find Them,', by far the cleverest little guide to the great Exposition that has been published. It is a guide book that "guides," taking the visitor in charge and conducting him about the grounds and throughout the buildings, indicating the character of each display and mentioning specifically every feature and article ten and where it is to be found. It is a book that it would be well for the visitor to read before going to the Fair, and it is a necessity for all who wish to see the Exposition systematically. It should be in the pocket of every visitor-where it will easily go, To make it doubly convenient, the left hand pages throughout the book are blank, for memoranda, and there is given a list of routes for one, three, six, and twelve day visits. The price is but 25 cents.-White City Pub. Co., 571 The Rookery, Chicago, Ill.

there was a pitiful quiver in his voice. "Al, it's gone wrong with Maurice! That steamer isn't in distress or she would show other signals. She's only tired of waiting out there in the blow. It's the same one, and Doc's gone with our last boat."

The other man made no answer. The same belief had come upon him with crushing force.

The second skiff rapidly approached the steamer. Indeed it was fortunate for them that she began burning the extra lights, for they, too, had been borne along by tide and storm faster than they imagined, and a few minutes more would have carried them beyond her. Miner seized the ladder and climbed aboard in great haste. "How long have you been here, captain?" he inquired hurriedly.

"For more than an hour!" The captain was very irate. "By heavens, I began to believe every pilot in the bay was asleep or afraid"— He broke off suddenly, for at the first words Miner had sprung to the side.

"Hold fast, boys, while I tow you up to windward of the breakwater! Hurry aboard the Holland and tell them Maurice Aurand is gone adrift!" He sprang to the wheelhouse. "Full speed ahead!" rang the signal, and the great vessel cut the waves faster and faster, while he headed her inshore toward the upper end of the harbor. The slight skiff alongside leaped from wave to wave, burying her bow in each one and drenching the men in her to the skin while they plunged through the few miles that lay between them and the Holland. As they neared the great pile of stone Miner slowed up to allow the skiff to cast off safely.

"Tell them Maurice is gone adrift and for them to go look for him!" he shouted to the men in her.

Meanwhile the two pilots left alone in the Holland were in an ecstasy of rage at their own hopelessness. They could do nothing until the second boat returned, and though barely half an hour had elapsed since the skiff had left them Truxill paced the icy deck with childish impatience. He was too strong a man to act foolishly, but not too strong to fret at the enforced delay.

"There she is at last!" he cried as five hoarse whistles sounded just beyond the breakwater light. It was their own signal, their vessel being No. 5 of the pilot "Something's wrong, and Doc's towing the skiff all the way in, and we can't do anything till they get here."

A few minutes more brought the skiff dashing alongside. Half a dozen words sufficed to explain the situation. There was no need for orders. The men flew to the windlass and raised the anchors, for the storm had made it necessary to drop both of them, while two pilots shook out as much of the frozen sails, already triple reefed, as they dared to carry. Like a live thing that knew her errand the Holland flew through the regulator and corrector for all ailments peculiar to woman. It enriches the blood and gives lasting strength. Strangely enough, no one seemed to remember the two lost sailors. Even the two Norwegians, who were all of the crew left on board, seemed to forget their suffering fellow countrymen in their anxiety for the young pilot. Up and down, each time farther to sea, they searched through the night, flashing their torches many times in every hour, then scanning the watery desert on all sides, waiting and hoping always for the answering gleam that never appeared. Not a man left the deck for a moment. Hail, storm and cold, all were unheeded. Throughout the long night they sailed to and fro; their hearts were growing heavier and their thoughts more bitter. Through the dawn and the dim sunrise all the morning they searched in vain. And then, sorrowfully, they turned the Holland's head westward and beat up again to their anchorage of the night before.

CHAPTER III.

She gazed long and wistfully out to sea. Nell Graves looked out of the window and saw a well known figure coming up the street. The snow and hail had ceased when the wind changed with the dawn, but the breeze was brisk and the temperature freezing. It was the kind of weather in which few men would care to loiter on their way, yet this man seemed to be moving as slowly as possible. He leaned back heavily against the wind that pushed him forward and seemed reluctant to approach the house. Nell ran out to the gate, careless of

The wound in his own breast was so recent it would not bear touching. "We searched all night and this morning, but couldn't find a sign of them. The other boats have gone out to look," he continued, with some vague idea that the words might convey a little comfort and hope. Hope to her, herself a pilot's daughter! She knew as well as he did what the chances were. Without a word or sign she turned from him and entered the house with a firm tread, closwords to place the whole scene like a picture before the eyes of each one of them. The old man broke down completely and wept as his daughter might ave done. He had come to feel toward Maurice as to his own son. His own eldest boy, a pilot also, had gone adrift during a short summer squall. The skiff was picked up weeks afterward a hundred miles at sea empty What chance was there, then, for this other boy, gone in the same way in the midst of a winter storm? Under the infection of their misery even Truxill's endurance gave way at last.

"Where's Nell?" he queried.

"She's gone up to her room," sobbed her sister without raising her tear stained face. "I heard her lock the door." "Some one must look after her," commanded her father, and Anna went slow-

"What do you want?" cried a voice from within in answer to her knock. It was a hard voice, a cold voice, without a quiver suggestive of tears. At any other time or place she would not have be-

"Can I do anything for you, Nell?" Grief was a new thing to the girl. She wanted to comfort her sister, if only some one would tell her what to do or say, but youth and inexperience were against her. The mother who had died at Jim's birth could have told her. It was just before that that the other son had didn't sound that way.

The old pilot seemed incapable of taking the lead. Anna was too young to know. "Best let her alone for awhile," said Truxill after a pause. "Tomorrow, if she doesn't cry"-he hesitated-"something will have to be done," he concluded what lay nearest their hearts. She ate and drank as usual, but spent the whole time wandering about the house, unresting. Every hour she went to the gate and looked up the street expectantly. Friends passed by, and with faces half averted greeted her with words meant to comfort. She never seemed to hear them. Once-it was on the morning of the third day after Maurice was lostshe walked down to the beach, the faithful Jim following at a distance, and gazed long and wistfully out to sea. Great waves dashed fiercely against the massive rocks of the breakwater and sent the spray flying over the low lighthouse. She could see others, coming from afar out, pass through the gap and pass on, each one in hot chase of another, to break at her feet with a hungry roar. One sail was visible far out in the bay, the blue ensign displayed at its peak. It was the "takeoff boat" waiting to receive the pilots coming home from up the river. Coming home! She knew well why none of the other boats of the pilot fleet were in sight, even beyond the cape. She turned back, with convulsive shudders rending her, and went to her own room, locking the door.

CHAPTER IV.

The first day. the northeast. An iron crimson line appeared to the eastward and brightene through the dull, gray mist, which broke up into flying banks of clouds as the day increased. It shone on a heaving mass of foam painted waters, a ghastly monotony of solitude, except for a fruitboat drifting fast before the wind, driven ever farther to sea in spite of the exertions of the two rowers feebly plying their oars.

Their limbs are chilled, and their mouths are dry. It is 10 hours since they have tasted water. The salt spray dashes in their faces and moistens their lips. They are seized with a terrible craving to lick it off, but they have strength enough to refrain; they are not mad yet. A young man sits in the stern, the steering oar in his hand; his restless eyes peer ever about over the distant horizon Occasionally he exchanges places with one of the rowers and pulls lustily for an hour or more; it is evidently for the purpose of warming his stiffening limbs. not with the expectation of improving their situation. As the day passes their strokes grow always weaker; at last the young man rises, ties the oars to the end of the boat's painter and casts them overboard. They act as a drag and keep the boat's head up to the wind, which blows colder as the air clears. It is better to save their strength till nightfall; then they must row to keep from freezing. The men huddle close together and hardly stir until the darkness covers them; then the young man rises again, unties the oars, and they row feebly to keep themselves warm. They try to light the lantern at dusk, but their wet matches refuse to burn, so they struggle on in the dark.

The second day dawns. The sky is hazy and red, but brighter. The wind is less fierce, but as cold as before. The sun breaks forth at last bright and cheerful. He beams joyously on the helpless castaways. Again the leader casts overboard the oars, and the skiff drifts on for another day. They are almost frantic for want of food and water, but they keep a close watch for passing sails. Not a sign of human life breaks the awful loneliness. The minutes are hours, and the day an eternity as it wears on laden with despair. At last the curtain of the night comes down. The leader creeps forward and pulls at the oars. This time he cannot lift them in alone. The long continued soaking has stiffened the knots, and the exposed parts of the swollen rope are frozen. They struggle frantically to loose them, but their numbed fingers are powerless to move the stiff cords. Their hands crack in many places with the fierce effort, but they hardly feel the pain. The blood flows sluggishly from the raw and gaping wounds and freezes before it'can drop off their nerveless fingers. With a groan of utter misery they cast the oars again into the sea. Now de spair is with them; he sits up in the bow and grimaces at them; he mocks them with the ghastly certainty that they are hourly-growing weaker and colder and drifting every moment farther to sea, farther from hope. They crouch together once more. Their numbed limbs are hard to bend. Will they ever unbend them?

The third day.

There is a heavy coating of ice over the boat; it covers the sides with a glassy raiment and forms a solid mass, like a great marble block upon the float. As the light grows the younger man stirs and draws himself with difficulty-away from his companions. One of them is strangely rigid; the young man shakes him with his stiffened fingers. The icy coat cracks loudly, falls loose from the frozen thwart, and with the next lurch of the boat the man falls heavily upon his side. Even now not a muscle moves, and half dazed the young man realizes that his companion of the night is a frozen corpse. They cannot pass the day with that awful thing staring them in the face, its icy limbs pressing against the two survivors.

The Norwegian wakes, but is too weak assist. He nods intelligently when the pilot points from the dead man to the sea. He makes a futile effort to lift his arms; they drop powerless, and the younger man sees that what is to be done he must do alone. His own arms are useless. He stoops with great exertion, places his shoulder against the corpse, and after much heaving manages to shove it overboard. It falls with a soft splash into a passing wave and sinks immediately. The great white gulls fly over the head of the pilot and circle round the spot where the dead man sank. Their screaming whistle sounds faintly in his dulled ears as they alight in the water close beside the boat, searching for the prey that is gone out of their reach. He glares at them fiercely, but they have no fear of him. To seize one of them would mean renewed life to him and his companion, but even when they come within his reach his hands cannot close on them.

He sinks beside the Norwegian, and his bleared eyes search the horizon from under swollen lids and frozen lashes. So far his splendid vitality has held him up. Now he is despairing, and hope abandons him quickly. The night finds the two men leaning close together. The wind increases, and the spray dashes into the skiff. The stars shine brilliantly on the drifting boat half full of solid ice. It closes firmly around the legs of the castaways. Motion is no longer possible, and a deadly lethargy, drowsy and merciful, is fast creeping over them.

And it is the morning of the fourth fallen into an apathetic indimerence to everything. Now she sat by the window, out of which she seldom glanced, but she turned her head wearily in response to her sister's appeal. She saw the great harbor and vessels of all sorts and sizes lying within its shelter, among them some half dozen of the familiar pilotboats, with the great black figures nigh up on the mainsail.

There was nothing new about this. She had seen the same thing thousands of times before. Yet her heart gave a great leap and the color flew to her pale face as she gazed spellbound out to sea, for the harbor looked strangely different from its usual quiet-it was a veritable blaze of color. Steamers waiting patiently for orders had a dozen ensigns floating in the air-far too many for any purpose of signaling. The tall flagstaff by the breakwater light were strung from top to toe with flags and pennants of curious pattern, while every pilotboat displayed both the American flag and the great blue "jack" of the pilot fleet at the mainmast head and had her halyards strung with gaudy bunting. The girl gasped as she looked out. Some great event was being celebrated, and for her there was only one event.

"Run, Anna; see what it is," she cried faintly, sinking back in her chair. It was the first time she had shown a sign of interest in anything since John Truxill had come to her as a messenger of evil tidings. Once more she saw Truxill coming up the street, with the wind at his back. But this time he did not hold back against its pressure. He seemed to long for winged feet. As he saw Anna come to the door he waved his hat and shouted. He did not think that Nell might be looking, nor, in truth, if he had known, could he have easily restrained himself. As he came within hearing distance his pent up exultation carried him away.

'We've found Maurice! Hurrah!" he shouted. "Where's Nell?" She heard him through the open door; she sprang to her feet as if electrified, and in a moment had shoved her sister aside.

"What is that?" she cried. There was the terture of uncertainty and anxiety in her voice. She had surely heard aright but it seemed impossible to believe the news all at once.

"Maurice is found! Picked up at sea after four days. The steamer that found him brought him into breakwater last night, and they are bringing him home. I hurried ahead to tell you the good news.'

As he was speaking young Jim appeared at Nell's side, coming from no one knew where. "Hurrah!" he shouted with a wild yell, flinging up his arms and beginning a war dance for joy. Nell caught the infection. "Hurrah!" she cried too. She seized the cap from her brother's head and flung it high in the air. "Hurrah for our side!" The old minister was approaching the house. She had learned from him the same prayers he had taught her mother 30 years before her.

'Ah, you can laugh now!" said he. He smiled as he spoke, but his eyes glistened; perhaps the wind was too cutting.

"Yes, I can laugh now," echoed the girl and proceeded to prove her assertion by a burst of hysterical tears. They were soon over, however, and she turned to Truxill, who had been an awkward and helpless witness of her kaleidoscopic changes. Where are they taking him?" she demanded. "Home, of course."

He stared at her blankly. Was she losing her mind? He had heard of such things. In a moment she undeceived

"Bring him here!" He had no longer a doubt of her sanity, but for the moment amazement deprived him of speech.

"Don't you understand?" impatiently.
"Bring him here." Napoleon in battle could not have been more peremptory. "She is right," said the old minister aside to Truxill. "It is a fitting place, and no one could care for the motherless lad as she will. She will bring him through if it is possible."

Nell did not hear him, but Truxill shivered at the word.

"Tell them to hurry," exclaimed the girl impatiently. She hastened into the house to make whatever slight preparation was necessary.

They bore him toward the house. She could not endure to see him carried in so like a dead man. "Tell me when they have left him," she whispered to her sister, and then crept up to her room and sat shivering with shut eyes and fast stopped ears. Her impatience would carry her away if she allowed herself to know when they brought him in.

They bore him into the house; it was done at last. Anna called her sister, now suddenly faint and weak.

Grave men stood outside the door discussing the pilot's chance of life or death. They were silent as she approached and stood aside reverently with bowed heads and averted faces as she passed them. There was no reason why she should not see him alone; they had done for him all that human skill could do for the present. Coming from the light into the darkened room for a moment, she was blinded, but her eyes straightway sought the place where she knew the bed should stand.

Oh, God! Is that her lover? She sees a great bundle of white bandages lying motionless upon the bed, with a huge, shapeless mass projecting like a club on either side. These are his arms.

The poor, frozen hands are not to be distinguished, they are so closely wrapped, but their size is immense. On the pillow Hes what must be his head, also closely wrapped, save where at rare invervals there is visible a patch of crimson skin, disfigured further by dull, purple blotches. Is that awful thing her lover? She remembered her last words to him only a week ago. She bit her lips fiercely to restrain a cry. For the moment she hated herself, as if this had been her own doing. But at least he needed her help. At the thought she nerved herself as only a woman can to do a woman's work He lay apparently asleep. His eyes were closed and his breathing slow and regular. Timidly she touched the heavy bandages on face and hands, trying to realize that this was indeed the Maurice she knew. The long tried nerves were excited to supersensitive perception. Tender as her touch was, the contact of her fingers made him thrill with acutest agony. He drew in his breath slowly and opened his eyes. Could they not let him die in peace? He had not known nor cared whither they were taking him. Now his gaze wandered wonderingly about the room for a momen', as the tired brain strove to account for the unfamiliar surroundings, then fell at last on the girl standing speechless beside him, agonized entreaty in her eyes.

"Nell!" The sound was a mere whisper, yet there was in it a great wonder and a greater love.

She leaned over him. She kissed the bandages softly where they covered his swollen and disfigured face. What did she care for his frightful appearance? After all, it was the man she loved.

"I'll never be bad to you again, Maurice," she whispered.

The purple eyelids lifted a trifle higher, and the dulled eyes shone a little brighter, but they seemed to express more of pity and sympathy than of gladness. With a mighty effort that racked his frame from head to foot, he forced his stiffened and swollen lips to speak dis-

"I'm afraid you'll never have the chance, dear." The effort was too much for his already overtasked strength, and he lapsed into his former unconscious-

The girl stood motionless for a moment while she tried to understand the meaning of the words as they seemed to sink deeper and deeper into her breast and seared her heart like swords of flame. Then all in a moment she realized what he had meant. She covered her face, with a bitter cry, and fell prone upon the floor beside the couch.

CHAPTER VI.

Unless Maurice Aurand had a double he must somehow have managed to survive the awful sufferings of those four nights and days of exposure, for some five years afterward another young pilot of the same name and the same physique sat on the long divan in the cabin of the pilotboat Jackson Holland. He must have been narrating some wonderful achievement or experience, for his auditor sat opposite him with eyes and mouth open in amazement.
"Of course I didn't die," he remarked benignly. The enthrallment of his auditor in his story had pleased the young pilot greatly; it was a marked tribute to his powers of relation. "I'm a pretty healthy looking corpse, don't you think? The doctors wanted to saw both my legs off close to the body; said I couldn't live unless they were taken off-the fools! I wouldn't have it, and Nell and the rest stood by me, and I've got 'em yet!" triumphantly.

"I couldn't get married that year, for the doctors' bills and other expenses used up all I had saved to get married on, but that didn't bother me any, for I knew my girl would wait for me. We didn't get married till two years after that, and I'll tell you what, old man," with a joyous, half shy laugh, "it never makes any difference what either of us does, we've never exchanged a cross word from that day to this." He took his pipe from his mouth and waved it oratorically in the air as he went on, with ominous slowness of speech, "But you just try making her mad yourself and see what happens then!"—Philadelphia Times.

The remedies employed at Hornells ville, although as harmless as those of Vienna, are far more effective—wholly removing the odor of the growth within twenty-four hour, and causing the diseased tissue to shrink to a hard, dry eschar until it is crowded out by healthy healing granulations. There is no poulficing or sloughing, no running scree or foul doors. It is the only known method that reaches and expels every cancerous cell.

J. W. Sheely, merchant tailor of Detroit, has opened an elegant tailoring establishment at 7 E. Ann-st. Mr. Sheely informs us that he has come to Ann Arbor to give the people here an establishment which will be able to turn out just as fashionable garments as it is possible to secure any where in the country. Mr. Sheely expects to employ none but the best workmen and hopes to, and no doubt will, work up a first class business.

Dr. Kellogg, of the fifth ward died of typhoid fever last Saturday afternoon. The doctor was well known to Ann Arbor people, having a host of warm friends among his associates. In a business way he was very successful. He was the manufacturer of a number of family remedies for which he had worked up a wide sale. The remains were interred Monday at five P. M. His wife, a daughter of William Lovejoy of Detroit, survives him.

The case against Lyman Brown, charged with an assault and battery upon a little girl was up before Justice Bennett last Monday morning. The case was dismissed in order that the defendent could be re-arrested on two more serious charges; taking indecent liberties with a female child, and, second, intent to commit rape. The case was then postponed for one week and the defendent, being unable to secure $1000 bail, was locked up.

The office of the town clerk of Ann Arbor town, is not "under the bridge." The report probably arose from the fact that Clerk Widemann passed some portion of his time there last week-He was not there of his own free will and accord. He had no business there and was surprised to learn that he was there. Fact is, the colt he was leading jumped off the bridge and Mr. Widemann, having the halter twisted about his hand, did not feel at liberty to desert the animal. That is why he was there with the finger out of joint. Let no one be proud or feel that he is above others, simply because he holds office.-Adrian Press.

The residence of Victor Strong, on Oxford-st, was burglarized Saturday noon by three tramps. A pocketbook containing $765, a ladies' gold watch, and chain, a revolver, etc., were stolen. The house was completely ransacked. A light of glass was out of a window and a shingle had been nailed across the hole. This they broke off and opened the window by reaching in through the hole. Mrs. Strong discovered the burglary soon after it happened, but Sheriff Brenner was not no tified until after tea. The tramps were seen walking toward Ypsilanti. If prompt notice had been given they might have been caught.-Times.

Charles Roberts, a prominent and well-to-do farmer living on the Detroit and Saline road, three miles west of Ypsilanti, drove home Saturday night, reaching there at about 11 o'clock. He put his large, valuable horse in the barn. When he arose in the morning the horse was gone, together with harness and a new buggy. The horse was partment of Civil Engineering in the U. of M. Poor People's Gardens.

Until he saw it with his own eyes, the east end of London was, to M. Francisque Sarcey, the region of Jack the Ripper. He had been led to expect in it a hideous blot on creation and a place which it would be unsafe for him to explore except under police protection. He came away from it agreeably disillusioned. Had he remained long enough in London to see the window gardening exhibition, opened at St. George's parish church yesterday, he would have said that the east enders were people of taste as well as of comparative comfort and of respect for law and order. Window gardening in eastern London has reached the dignity of a fine art. It is making a great and steady progress, and this year's exhibition is pronounced to be superior to the five that have preceded it. Most of the 300 plants exhibited have been cultivated by young people living in Shadwell and its neighboring districts.-London News.

Baking SCHAIRER & MILLEN

A BIG MARK DOWN SALE FOR TEN DAYS.

COMMENCING FRIDAY MORNING AUGUCT 25.

PRICES MADE REGARDLESS OF COST.

The times are a little dislocated just at present in fact out of joint. Unreasonable lack of confidence withdraws money from banks and stores it in stocking and old mattresses. No sense in it. Our banks are all right and have their vaults full of money. It looks better piled up on their counters and in their safes than in your pockets and a man must be a pretty good one even then to get a few hundred. Therefore, we say, empty your stockings and invest it in merchandise at about 50 cents on the dollar.
