THE OLD SCHOOLMASTER.

by GEORGE W. JENKINS.

The master's face was wrinkled now.

His thin, dark hair was turning gray.

His eyes were dim and his hands were old.

He had been a schoolmaster for many years.

He had seen many changes in the world.

He had seen many people come and go.

He had seen many things that he had never seen before.

He had seen many things that he had never seen before.

He had seen many things that he had never seen before.

He had seen many things that he had never seen before.

He had seen many things that he had never seen before.

He had seen many things that he had never seen before.

He had seen many things that he had never seen before.
