Dear Sarah!

I adored our time together. (Come back, needless to say.) What a talk we had! Andrew told me about your ~~workshop~~^{workshop}, with Natalie and Emily.

I have not made any notes or drawings, but I have lived with the eminence of that happy time.

I was just going through albums of photographs, and I found a photograph that Stephen took in Jane's study, full-face and rather meditative. Probably you have a copy and certainly you have a negative. On the other hand, if you don't remember it, I could send it to you, or make a copy.

I had seen Andrew's house in 1950 or so. It belonged to one of my Harvard professors, who had me out there. Probably it had as many books as I do, all sagging on boards between bricks. Andrew had it altered a bit, for a year or so. They moved in shortly before Jane died, so Jane never had a chance to see it. Twenty years!

Speaking of Jane, I do love her poem addressed to you.

I love showing everybody my face with the apple stuck in it, both photographs – and notice that even back then, I went to the same hairdresser.

Love!
